The Bhikkhus’ Rules
A Guide for Laypeople

The Theravadin Buddhist Monk’s Rules

Compiled and Explained by Bhikkhu Ariyesako
This edition is specially formatted for viewing onscreen in a PDF Viewer. For easy navigation use the bookmarks feature and the hyper-links to jump to cross-references. There are several ways to then return to the original location: by either right-clicking or clicking the ‘back’ arrow in the menu bars. See the PDF Viewer help file for more information.

For information about a printed version, please contact the author at the above address.

Reprinting (or any use) for sale is strictly prohibited.
Discipline is for the sake of restraint, restraint for the sake of freedom from remorse, freedom from remorse for the sake of joy, joy for the sake of rapture, rapture for the sake of tranquillity, tranquillity for the sake of pleasure, pleasure for the sake of concentration, concentration for the sake of knowledge and vision of things as they are, knowledge and vision of things as they are for the sake of disenchantment, disenchantment for the sake of release, release for the sake of knowledge and vision of release, knowledge and vision of release for the sake of total unbinding without clinging.

Parivāra.XII.2 (BMC p.1)
Table of Contents

Preface ................................................................. 10
Acknowledgements ..................................................... 14
Abbreviations .......................................................... 15
Introduction ........................................................... 16

PART ONE ............................................................. 20
  Beginner’s Questions ............................................... 21
  Frequently Asked Questions ...................................... 31

PART TWO ............................................................. 42
Establishing a Background .......................................... 42
  Precepts ........................................................... 43
  Bhikkhus ........................................................... 45
  Becoming a Novice ............................................... 46
  Becoming a Bhikkhu ............................................... 47
Ordination in South East Asia ...................................... 50
The Rains Retreat .................................................... 51
Disrobing .............................................................. 52
Buddhist Nuns ......................................................... 53
The Vinaya and the Patimokkha

- Offences
- Major Rule Groups of the Patimokkha
- Committing Offences
- Modernization? The Great Standards
- Strictness and Blaming Others

PART THREE

The Patimokkha Rules

(I) Harmlessness
- Murder
- Killing
- Destroying Vegetation

(II) Relationships
- Sexual Intercourse
- Intimacy—Touching
- Flirting
- Propositioning
- Matchmaking
- Alone with a Woman
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Topic</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Talking Privately</td>
<td>88</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Staying Together</td>
<td>89</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Travelling Together</td>
<td>93</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(III) Possessions and Offerings</td>
<td>94</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Four Requisites</td>
<td>96</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>What Does a Bhikkhu Need?</td>
<td>96</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Does a Bhikkhu Beg?</td>
<td>98</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>How to Help a Bhikkhu—Invitation</td>
<td>99</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>What does a Bhikkhu Possess?</td>
<td>102</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wrongly Receiving Gifts</td>
<td>105</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>What can be Offered?</td>
<td>107</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clothing: The Robe</td>
<td>108</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Robe Offering Time</td>
<td>111</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alms Food</td>
<td>112</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Begging for Food</td>
<td>114</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Receiving and Eating Food</td>
<td>116</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Meal Time</td>
<td>119</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Four Sorts of ‘Edibles’</td>
<td>121</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mixing Edibles</td>
<td>122</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Topic</td>
<td>Page</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>----------------------------------------------</td>
<td>------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barter or Trade</td>
<td>160</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>‘Untouchable’ Things?</td>
<td>161</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lodgings</td>
<td>162</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Luxurious Lodgings</td>
<td>163</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Furniture</td>
<td>164</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(IV) Right Livelihood for A Bhikkhu</td>
<td>165</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Teaching Dhamma</td>
<td>166</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robbery by False Pretences</td>
<td>169</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Proper Behaviour Outside the Monastery</td>
<td>172</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Socializing and Wrong Resort</td>
<td>175</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wrong Ways of Behaviour</td>
<td>177</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wrong Livelihood</td>
<td>178</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>‘Corrupting Families’</td>
<td>180</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Intruding on Families</td>
<td>183</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(V) Miscellaneous</td>
<td>185</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Disputes</td>
<td>186</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Schools of Buddhism</td>
<td>188</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Etiquette</td>
<td>192</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Names and Forms of Address</td>
<td>194</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Preface

Buddhist friends in Malaysia asked me to explain something about the Vinaya rules that guide the Buddhist monk’s life—in particular about monks or bhikkhus of the Theravāda lineage. We monks already have several learned texts in English to help us so a simplified ‘lay person’s guide’ now seems in order. (This work therefore deals specifically with men. As Buddhist female renunciants (nuns) find their place, they will be in the best position to explain their own rules.)

My aim has been to illustrate those of the monk’s rules that also affect the lay person in some way. At first it was going to deal only with a few questions but it has grown with people’s suggestions into a more thorough work of reference. (It was originally circulated as a computer printout, and its positive reception encouraged this complete reworking and revision, incorporating many of the suggestions sent to me.) Even so, the best introduction remains a good practising bhikkhu who shows that amid the myriad things of the material world, living the simple life is possible with care—hence the many rules—much as in the Buddha’s time.

The original Beginner’s Questions section has been kept (with some revision) and moved to the front as a brief overview of the sort of questions covered in the book. It refers to later explanations for more detail, which can be found not only in the main text but in the End Notes, Footnotes, Glossary and Appendices.

I also have tried to include broader explanations in the main text so that while the actual rule is faithfully reproduced—including some translation variations—the different ways in which monks actually put it into practice are also covered. Although one might think one knows all about ‘one’s bhikkhus’, on going elsewhere things are never quite the same, and sometimes in quite startling ways.

Bhikkhus do sometimes follow the rules in different ways according to their particular traditions, and these pages may help to explain the whys and wherefores of their practice. My own perspective comes from twenty years as a bhikkhu in the forest monasteries of Thailand (and now more than five years in the ‘West’) so I am very aware that this guide needs more information from the traditions in other countries.

As you read through this book, it will become plain how much I have relied on other people and authorities. I wish especially to mention my gratitude to Venerable Thanissaro Bhikkhu for his great contribution through his commentary on the bhikkhus’ rules, The Buddhist Monastic Code; to Venerable Thiradhammo Bhikkhu for his manuscript of The Heritage of the Sangha; to Venerable Brahmavangso
Bhikkhu for permission to quote from his Vinaya Notes; and to the Mahamakut Foundation in Bangkok for the works on the monk’s rules that they publish.

Lay people in half a dozen countries helped with advice and suggestions, and my thanks and appreciation go to all of them. I was very pleasantly surprised that they found our rules so fascinating and were willing to give so much of their time to going through the original manuscript with such care and interest. Yet on reflection, they are right to feel part of the Dhamma-Vinaya, as the Lord Buddha said:

“Bhikkhus, I praise right practice in both, whether householder or home-leaver.
“Householder, bhikkhus, and home-leaver, if rightly practised, by reason of their right practice, are accomplishing the true way, the wholesome Dhamma.”

HS ch.4 (A.I,69; M.II,197)

Please remember that tolerance is always important even if one decides to give active support to only one group of monks. The following pages are offered solely to shed the light of understanding, so they should not be used to create heat and friction through criticizing other people’s behaviour. This is the essence of the Buddha’s Teaching. A big heavy law book only too easily can be thrown at others, so this guide will try to stay light and non-judgemental. This gives opportunity for broad-mindedness and flexibility, so that we can include different interpretations. Thereby one may come better to appreciate and support the monastic community of one’s choice.

Finally, I hope that the same tolerance will be given to any faults and omissions found in this book. Not being enlightened or a scholar, I can only offer a gathering of other people’s work and hope that the way I have put it all together does not intrude my own views and opinions too much. (Paragraphs containing more general or personal opinions are often marked with “☆”.) Therefore, any suggestions for improvement offered in Dhamma are always welcome.

_Bhikkhu Ariyesako_

August 1998
Acknowledgements

A Lay Buddhist’s Guide to the Monks’ Code of Conduct. © Bodhinyana Monastery, Lot 1, Kingsbury Drive, Serpentine, Western Australia 6205, Australia.

(1) Buddhist Monastic Code; (2) Introduction to the Patimokkha Rules. © Thanissaro Bhikkhu, Metta Forest Monastery, PO Box 1409, CA 92082, USA.

(1) The Entrance to the Vinaya, Vinayamukha, 3 vols; (2) Navakovāda: Instructions for Newly ordained Bhikkhus and Sāmaneras; (3) Ordination Procedure and the Preliminary duties of a New Bhikkhu; (4) The Patimokkha, trans. by Ven. Nyanamoli Thera—All © Mahamakut Rajavidyalaya Press, Phra Sumeru Road, Bangkok 1020, Thailand.

The Heritage of the Sangha, The lifestyle and training of the Buddhist religious community. ( Newly revised Edition), Thiradhammo Bhikkhu, December 1996

Observances, © Wat Pah Nanachat, Ban Bung Wai, Ubon Ratchathani, Thailand. See Bibliography for other details.

Abbreviations

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Abbreviation</th>
<th>Description</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>AB</td>
<td>Ajahn Brahmavamso’s Notes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>BA</td>
<td>Banner of the Arahants</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>BBC</td>
<td>Burmese Buddhist Culture</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>BMC</td>
<td>The Buddhist Monastic Code</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>EN</td>
<td>End Notes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>EV</td>
<td>The Entrance to the Vinaya, (Vinayamukha) in 3 vols</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>HS</td>
<td>The Heritage of the Sangha</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nv</td>
<td>Navakovāda: Instructions for newly ordained Bhikkhus and Sāmaneras</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nis. Pāc.</td>
<td>nisaggiya pācittiya offence</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>OP</td>
<td>Ordination Procedure</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pāc.</td>
<td>pācittiya offence</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pār.</td>
<td>pārājika offence</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saṅgh.</td>
<td>saṅghādisesa offence</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Introduction

The Teaching of the Buddha is concerned with more than intellectual knowledge for it needs to be experienced as truth in one’s own life. The Buddha often called his Teaching the Dhamma-Vinaya and when he passed away he left these as the guide for all of us who followed. As Venerable Thiradhammo writes:

“In simple terms we could say that while Dhamma represented the principles of Truth, the Vinaya represented the most efficacious lifestyle for the realization of that Truth. Or, the Vinaya was that way of life which enshrined the principles of Truth in the practicalities of living within the world.” (HS Part 2)

For the bhikkhu, the Vinaya helps to highlight actions and speech, and show up their significance. It brings an awareness of how he is intervening in the world, how he is affecting other people. For better? For worse? With what intention?
Of course, such an awareness is necessary for every human being, not just Buddhist monks. This is why the Buddha bequeathed to us the Five, the Eight and the Ten Precepts[4]—as well as the bhikkhu’s 227 rules of the Pātimokkha. These precepts and rules remain as pertinent today as they were 2,500 years ago for they restore the focus back to the human being, to how actions and words affect individuals and the world. While the particulars may have changed, the fundamentals remain the same.

Those who take the Buddha’s Teaching seriously become ever more aware of their actions and speech, and how they match up against the Five Precepts. They then might start to realize the advantage in occasionally keeping the Eight Precepts—perhaps on the weekly Observance Day[5]—and become more interested in the bhikkhu’s Rule and how its precepts come together into a whole way of life.

This compilation, therefore, is for anyone interested in bhikkhus and how to relate to them. Some might think that the Theravāda lineage follows an overly traditionalist[6] approach but then, it does happen to be the oldest living major tradition.[7] A slight caution therefore for anyone completely new to the ways of monasticism, for it is an approach to dealing with life that may appear radically different for this modern day and age. The best introduction, perhaps essential for a true understanding, is meeting with a practising bhikkhu who should manifest and reflect the peaceful and joyous qualities of the bhikkhu’s way of life.

Buddhist monks and nuns first received the going-forth into the Holy Life from the Buddha himself, more than two and a half thousand years ago in India. Since then, their influence has been felt over much of Asia. The countries of Sri Lanka and South East Asia have been profoundly affected by the Theravadin School of Buddhism, which looks back to the original Teachings as recorded in the Pāli scriptures. Buddhism was often first introduced to a new country when bhikkhus were invited to come and teach the new religion by the indigenous ruler. This process now continues throughout the world, although the invitation nowadays comes more often from local Buddhists.

Buddhism is justly admired for its appreciation of tolerance and broad-mindedness, with a history generally unblemished by heretical infighting. This has resulted in a wide spectrum of practices, from the old Theravāda to the Zen of Japan and the Vajrayana of Tibet. Even between the different Theravadin countries and Schools there are slight variations in the ways the bhikkhus understand and practise the Vinaya Rule. Such differences have sometimes confused lay devotees so this book is also an attempt to offer a clearer understanding about the responsibilities of the Theravadin bhikkhu’s life and those of the lay devotee.

When the Buddha was about to finally pass away and leave his followers, rather than appoint an individual to take his place he said this:
“Whatever Dhamma and Vinaya I have pointed out and formulated for you, that will be your Teacher when I am gone”
(Mahāparinibbāna Sutta, [D.16])

More than twenty-five centuries have now gone by; empires have come and gone, great movements and ideologies have flared up and been lost. Yet on a deeper level under all of this, the Dhamma and Vinaya have been quietly guiding the communities of Buddhist monks. Why has it withstood the test of time so well? Why has it been so successful? Perhaps it is because the Lord Buddha understood the basic human condition of every time or place; he knew our predicament and failings, and he could show the way out to those of us who follow so long after him.

I. A.
PART ONE

Beginner’s Questions
Frequently Asked Questions
Beginner’s Questions

This section illustrates the origins of this book, for it is a selection of the unedited questions that were first sent to me. I have decided to make it an entry-point for those people completely new to the Vinaya Rule rather than relegate it to an appendix (or omit it altogether). The answers often repeat or point to information contained later in the full text. Those people already familiar with the rules can skip these Beginner’s and Frequently Asked Questions and go to the relevant section for more details.

Q 1: “Why does a monk wear the robe? Why do some wear brown robes and others wear yellowish brown?”

A: The Lord Buddha gave this reflection about why a monk wears a robe:

“Properly considering the robe, I use it: simply to ward off cold, to ward off heat, to ward off the touch of flies, mosquitoes, simply for the purpose of covering the parts of the body which cause shame.”

(OP p.46)
In the Lord Buddha’s time, 2,500 years ago, clothing[9] was made without complex machinery. (Although simple ‘sewing-frames’ are mentioned in the texts, which the monks would have used at robe-making (Kathina) time.) So the pattern of the robe is very simple and designed so that it can be made up out of patches of cloth, for discarded rags were often used after washing and dyeing.

This ‘yellow robe’ is considered the banner of the arahant and emblem of Buddhism. For the ordinary Theravādin bhikkhu it is a privilege to be able to wear this robe, continuing the tradition and practising to be worthy of it. There are rules as to the robes’ size, colour, how they are sewn, type of cloth used, etc., and how bhikkhus can acquire them. (See pages 108–110.)

The colour of the robes depends on the dye used. Until very recently, this would have been natural vegetable dye found in the jungle from roots or trees. (In NE Thailand, for example, we used the heartwood of the jack-fruit tree.) Nowadays chemical dyes are more used and sometimes give that more vivid orange colour that one sees in Bangkok.

The colour white is used by Buddhist devotees to show their commitment to keeping the Precepts—usually the Eight Precepts—on Observance Days. (White robes are also worn by the anagarika, or postulant before he becomes a monk.)
Q 2: “Why do monks eat from the bowl? Can lay people serve soup to monks in normal bowls? Can they serve fruits or desserts on plates instead of putting them in the monk’s bowl?”

A: The Lord Buddha gave this reflection about finding and eating food:

“Properly considering alms food, I use it: not playfully, nor for intoxication, nor for putting on weight, nor for beautification; but simply for the survival and continuance of this body, for ending its afflictions, for the support of the chaste life, (thinking) I will destroy old feelings (of hunger) and not create new feelings (from overeating). Thus I will maintain myself, be blameless, and live in comfort.”

(OP p.46)

The alms bowl is another practical symbol of Buddhism, and, like the robes, another requisite of the bhikkhu. Although every bhikkhu is given an alms bowl (and a set of robes) when he becomes a monk, not all of them will actually go on an alms round and only a minority—usually they are the forest meditation bhikkhus—will eat from their bowl sitting on the floor. Therefore many monks will eat using plates and dishes, while some will eat sitting on the floor at a small table and others at a normal western-style table. One should not feel shy about asking a monk as to his normal way of eating and then fit in with that.
Those forest bhikkhus who keep the austere practices (dhutaṅga or tudong)[10] will be stricter about only using one eating vessel. This can simplify life and remind the bhikkhu that although food is necessary for bodily health he does not have to indulge in an obsession with taste. (It also saves washing-up time.)

Q 3: “Why do monks live in the forest?”

A: In India during the Lord Buddha’s time much of the land was covered in forests and groves and this was where the wandering mendicants of the different orders would pursue their religious practices. The Lord Buddha spoke of the ‘foot of a tree’ as the basic shelter for bhikkhus, and this is usually still affirmed to every newly ordained bhikkhu. Later, monasteries were established and well-endowed, and the focus shifted to a more settled life. Mostly only the ‘forest monks’ now live in the forest where it is quiet and conducive to meditation. Many more monks will live in the village monastery or go to a monastery in the town to study the scriptures.

The Lord Buddha said this about the basics of shelter, whether in the forest or city:

> “Properly considering the lodging, I use it: simply to ward off cold, to ward off heat, to ward off the touch of flies, mosquitoes, wind, sun and reptiles; simply for protection from the inclemencies of weather and for the enjoyment of seclusion.” (OP p.46)
Q 4: “How does one who wants to become a monk find out how to go about getting the robe and bowl, etc.?” Q 5: “What is the procedure for a lay man to ordain?” Q 6: “How does one who wants to sponsor any newly ordained monk/nun with the necessities go about doing so?” Q 7: “How does a teacher assess and decide if one is suitable for ordination?”

A: In fact getting the robes and bowl is not so much a problem for once the candidate is accepted by a preceptor, the preceptor will know where suitable requisites may be found. The question should be more about the qualities necessary to become a monk and I have explained some of these in the section on "Becoming a Bhikkhu."

If the candidate’s intention is right and he is not disqualified by other factors, he should find a senior monk who can advise him on the places where he might ordain and perhaps recommend him to a preceptor. If the candidate lives in a non-Buddhist country, he can write for details to the country where he is interested in staying. Bhikkhus are often travelling and giving Dhamma talks around the world and they would generally be very happy to make suggestions about this.

In certain communities there is a ‘postulancy’ period when the candidate first wears white robes as an anagarika[11] and after a year (or two) may then be given either novice (sāmaṇera) or full bhikkhu ordination. Once he is accepted for this, all the requisites should be provided. (In some monasteries the candidate is provided with the cloth but has to learn to sew his own robes.)

Similarly for the lay person wanting to help supply requisites to the new monk, the best way is to ask details from a senior monk who will explain and help. In some Buddhist countries there are even special shops to supply these requisites but whether this is suitable will depend on the monastery of ordination.

Also, see the book Ordination Procedure and the Preliminary Duties of a New Bhikkhu.

Q 8: “How does a lay woman ordain? Does she become ordained only by bhikkhunī?”

A: The Theravadin lineage no longer has an ‘officially recognized’ bhikkhunī-ordination. There are other forms for lay women that still involve ‘leaving the home life’ and keeping Eight or Ten Precepts as a dasasīla mata nun. Finding a suitable place is quite difficult but several groups are trying to develop places conducive to Dhamma practice for such nuns. (For example, Amaravati Buddhist Monastery in England. See also page 53.)

Q 9: “Instead of letting the monks go on alms-round during rainy days, can the lay people request to bring dāna [the food offering] to the monks?”
Some bhikkhus take a daily alms-round as a special practice (dhutaṅga or tudong) and will normally always want to go. Many other monks will be happy to receive food brought to them. Please ask or observe how the monk practises. There is no harm in offering to bring the food, for if the monk prefers to walk on an alms-round he can explain about that.

Q 10: “Is there a minimum and maximum number of layers [of clothing] a monk can wear? Does the rule alter with the weather?”

A: There is a minimum in that the bhikkhu must be properly and modestly dressed, especially in public. (See page 173 and End Notes 70 and 71.) During the cold season in India, the Buddha allowed a double-layered outer robe (saṅghāti) to be used and so—using the Great Standards as a guide—in even colder climates extra layers may be allowable. In countries where hypothermia may be a danger, the use of extra layers seems sensible—especially if this cuts down on heating and medical expenses. (That a bhikkhu lives as frugally as possible is a major aspect of the Vinaya.) However, it is generally felt very important that the traditional robes remain the basic dress and ‘extra layers’ should not obscure this.

Q 11: “Is it [acceptable] that the ordained one requests some basic necessities such as food, drink, medicine, shelter, blankets, reasonable form of transport due to weakness (health reason)? How should one approach a monk or nun if one wants to offer necessities to them?"

A: There are definite conditions that allow a bhikkhu to ask for help. These would be when he is ill, or in danger, or when he has been formally offered help. See How to Help a Bhikkhu—Invitation for a fuller explanation.

Q 12: “Is it [acceptable] for one to offer basic necessities to monks or nuns without first asking them?”

A: Yes, generosity is a virtue highly praised by the Buddha and was often the first virtue he mentioned. It goes against the general modern selfish attitude of ‘getting is better than giving’ and leads on to contentment and the calm that can lead to deep meditation and wisdom. So, if it makes one happy to make an offering then one can do so without asking first. However, the offering should also be endowed with wisdom so that one gives something that is useful and not beyond one’s family’s means.

Q 13: “Why do we bow to monks/nuns and the Buddha Statue?”

A: The yellow robe worn by monks is an emblem and reminder of the Triple Gem, as is the Buddha Statue. Therefore one is really bowing to the Buddha, Dhamma and Sangha, not to some person or statue. There are two aspects to bowing—the bodily action and the mind. If one bows because it gives one the opportunity to demonstrate one’s faith in the Triple Gem, because it seems the right thing to do, and because it leads the mind to calm, then it will be beneficial. If one bows without reason or because one feels that one must do so for appearances sake, then it is a rather empty gesture. (Even so one’s appreciation can grow.)

When I bow three times to the Buddha Statue or to senior monks, I mentally recollect ‘Buddho’, then ‘Dhammo’ and then ‘Saṅgho’ and also have mindfulness of the bodily posture as it bends forward and the head touches the floor. (See pp. 192–3; End Note 120) However, in Western countries this is often misunderstood and can be the source of quite a lot of embarrassment. It is up to the persons themselves to decide what is appropriate under the different circumstances.

Q 14: “Is it [acceptable] to put two hands together [in aañjali] when paying respect to monks/nuns and Buddha Statue, or should one bow to show more respect?”

A: One should show respect from one’s heart in the way that seems best to oneself, recollecting the Triple Gem and doing it mindfully. No good monk (or Buddha statue) is going to take offence if one does not bow.

Q 15: “Why do monks shave their heads?”

29
A: When the prince who was to become the Buddha left his palace to seek a way beyond ageing, sickness and death, it is said that one of the first things that he did was to “shave off his hair and beard and put on the yellow cloth”. Buddhist monks always completely shave their head and beard, showing their commitment to the Holy Life (Brahmacariya) of one gone forth into the homeless life. (In India some ascetics tear out their hair, while others never touch it so that it becomes a tangled mass.)

A rule states that a bhikkhu should not allow his hair to grow beyond a certain length or time, so he will shave usually at least once a fortnight or month, sometimes more frequently. To do this he uses his razor, which is also one of his requisites.

‘Hair-of-the-head’ (kesā) is one of the five parts of the body mentioned in the ordination ceremony and is used to recollect the true nature of the body. The bhikkhu is also not allowed to dye or pluck out any grey hairs, for they are useful reminders of old-age and impermanence. (Just consider how much time and money is wasted by people trying to make their hair remain beautiful and young-looking.)
FAQ 1: “When a bhikkhu is sick and especially so in emergency cases, is he allowed to be attended to by female medical staff; e.g. female nurse, woman doctor, especially if the woman doctor is the only doctor/surgeon on duty? How does the Vinaya allow for this?”

FAQ 2: “It has been observed that in the Burmese, Sri Lankan, Tibetan and Mahayana traditions, women are allowed to make an offering directly to the monks. Yet Thai Buddhist monks are not allowed to accept offerings directly from women. Is it because it is against the Vinaya rules or a different interpretation of the rules?”

A 1&2: The Vinaya Rule specifies that if a bhikkhu touches or is touched by a woman, it is an offence—a very serious offence—only if the bhikkhu is “overcome by lust, with altered mind”. However, the practising bhikkhu knows that as his mind changes so quickly, he has to be extremely cautious about involving himself in doubtful situations. It is better to be safe than sorry, even if this may seem over-scrupulous. In emergency situations the bhikkhu will have to decide for himself and be sure to take care of his thoughts.

In Thailand it is a tradition (not strictly a rule) that the monk uses a ‘receiving cloth’ to emphasize that there is no touching. (For more about these questions, see pages 79, 124 and End Note 85.)

FAQ 3: “What is the rule if an eight-precepter unintentionally comes into [direct physical] contact with another lay person or eight-precepter or ten-precepter or monk or nun of opposite gender?”

A: As with the preceding cases with bhikkhus, there is no fault if there is no wrong intention.

FAQ 4: “It is mentioned in the Vinaya rules that a monk is not allowed to reside under the same roof with a woman. How does that apply to multistoried (condominiums, flats, apartments) and multi-compartment buildings (terrace houses), where the flats, terrace houses, share one roof?”

A: This has become a complex question with various interpretations because of modern conditions. The spirit of the rule is very important—avoiding possibilities of intimacy—while the interpretation will depend on the monk and the circumstances.
In countries without proper monasteries there will always have to be something of a compromise. (See page 89 for a discussion of this.)

FAQ 5: “The Vinaya rules disallow monks from touching or handling money. As such, in Buddhist countries monks must have a Kappiya [attendant] to handle money for them. However, if a monk has to travel and does not have a Kappiya, under such circumstances do the Vinaya rules allow him to handle money personally? This is a problem especially in non-Buddhist countries.”

A: While it may be a problem or inconvenience, the rules are there to protect and remind the monk about dangerous, unskilful actions. If the monk becomes increasingly involved with money there is a tendency for the whole of his bhikkhu-life to be compromised—and that would be a far greater problem. Soon after the Final Passing Away of the Lord Buddha this sort of question had already become a major controversy and it is now even more complex under modern conditions.

However, modern conditions also have brought their own assistance to keeping these rules. For instance, a bhikkhu can be given an air ticket and travel around the world (if need be) without having any money or attendant. He will need to be met at the airport and helped in the normal way, but that should be natural if he has been invited to come by the lay group. (He should not really be travelling otherwise.) And, of course, a monk can use postage stamps and ‘telephone-cards’ that add convenience to communicating—when it is appropriate. (See the section on Money, especially the Mendaka Allowance.)

FAQ 6: “Is there a Vinaya rule that states that once a person becomes a monk, he is not allowed to disrobe? If he is allowed to disrobe, is there anywhere in the Vinaya that sets the maximum number of times he is allowed to do so. If so, under what circumstances is he allowed to disrobe?”

A: I know of no place in the Vinaya that states a bhikkhu cannot disrobe. If he no longer has any interest in the bhikkhu-life, the tendency will be for him to become lax and a bad example for others. His Dhamma friends therefore will try to re-fire his enthusiasm. However, if that is not possible, becoming a good layman may be better than being a bad monk. (Nevertheless, in some countries there is a cultural expectation of ‘ordaining for life’ and a corresponding stigma attached to disrobing.) There is a tradition (but not a rule) about a bhikkhu not re-ordaining more than seven times. (See Disrobing.)

FAQ 7: “The Vinaya states that monks are not supposed to eat once the sun has passed its zenith. Still, what happens if they are in countries such as regions of the North or South Poles, e.g. Norway, Alaska, where the sun never sets for six months and for the next six months, there is no sun.”

A: I understand that the zenith here means when the sun reaches the highest point in its arc across the sky. In most habitable areas of the globe this arc may be low to the horizon but it should still be possible to follow the rule. And if bhikkhus ever reach the polar regions they will have the Great Standards to guide them. (More specifically, see page 119 for time limits.)

FAQ 8: “It is stated in the Vinaya that when a lay person offers fruit to a monk, he has to make a cut on one of the fruits to make it permissible for the monk to accept. How did this rule originate? Also, lay people, when offering fruit juices to monks after midday, are not allowed to offer fruit juices from fruits larger than the size of a fist. Is this in the Vinaya and why is it so?”

A: At the time of the Buddha, some lay people complained that the monks destroyed the ‘life’ in seeds. Therefore lay people can be asked by the monk if it is allowable for him to eat those fruits. In some monasteries (not all) this is done by the lay people cutting them. (See Offering Fruit: Kappiya and End Note 91.)

It is the Commentary to the Vinaya that mentions about ‘great fruits’. This practice, however, is not followed in every monastery. (See page 137.)
FAQ 9: “In Thailand, it has been observed that Thai Buddhist monks are allowed to drink tea, cocoa, coffee (but without milk) after midday. But in some other Buddhist countries like Burma, monks are not allowed to do this. Is this part of the Vinaya rules or is this just tradition, custom, or local practice? If it is in the Vinaya, how do you explain the differences in interpretation?”

A: The fourth of the Recollections of the Bhikkhu’s Requisites is:

        “Properly considering medicinal requisites for curing the sick, I use them: simply to ward off any pains of illness that have arisen, and for the maximum freedom from disease.”                              (OP p.47)

There is an allowance in the Pāli texts that ‘medicinal-tonics’ can be taken in the afternoon while ‘lifetime-medicines’ may be consumed any time they are needed.
(See Lifetime Medicines)

There are different interpretations and practices about how ill a bhikkhu has to be for it to be allowable to take such ‘medicines’. Some bhikkhus will not take anything other than pure water, while some will over-stretch the Rule to even drinking ‘medicinal’ food-drinks (e.g. Ovaltine) in the afternoon. Some bhikkhus will consider tea-leaves allowable (as ‘herbs’) while some will see it as food or as a ‘stimulant’ (caffeine) and therefore not appropriate. Also, the ordinary rural villagers of South East Asia (until very recently) would have had no tea or coffee to drink, so such items could be considered quite a luxury. It will depend on local conditions and interpretations, which are allowed for in the Vinaya through the Great Standards. (See pages 62 and 141.)

FAQ 10: “Can a monk retain property that he had as a lay person? Also, can a monk receive property that has been passed to him as inheritance? Is a monk also allowed to accept property donated to him by lay devotees and which has been transferred to his name? What is the Vinaya’s stance on this? Does the Vinaya also allow for monks to sell/transact property that has been donated to them in order to buy, for instance, another piece of land in an area that is more suitable for spiritual activities?”

A: This is a complicated question. If there is a steward who does the arranging for the bhikkhu in the proper manner then certain things would be allowable. (See What does a Bhikkhu Possess?) However, there are very strict guidelines about this. (Please see the various rules about Bhikkhus and Wealth, page 147 passim.) Practically speaking, bhikkhu in Thailand are not ordered to renounce all their property, etc., when they receive ordination. (As mentioned elsewhere, the majority of bhikkhus in Thailand will return to lay life within a certain period.) Bhikkhus who are serious about dedicating their life to the Holy Life will obviously take the Lord Buddha as their example and like Him renounce all that is worldly.
There are specific rules, not covered in this work, about Community land and property, and the different ways they are managed. (However, see also “Wrongly Receiving Gifts”.)

FAQ 11: “Does the Vinaya state that monks cannot take nuns and lay people as their teachers? If this is so, what is the reason for this?”

A: The taking of a Teacher (ācariya) by a bhikkhu and living in dependence (nissaya) on him can only be between bhikkhus. (See page 49; End Note 24 on the qualities of a Teacher.) And even according to the bhikkhunī’s own Rule, in the time of the Lord Buddha, she was not allowed to teach bhikkhus. However, this does not mean that a bhikkhu cannot learn from others.

FAQ 12: “Are monks allowed to own and/or drive vehicles? Is this allowed by the Vinaya? If it does not go against the Vinaya, would it still be socially acceptable, given the monk’s spiritual status in society?”

A: There is a specific rule against bhikkhus owning vehicles. Obviously, ‘motor vehicles’ were not available in the Buddha’s time and most travel would have been on foot. However, there was the case:

“…when the group-of-six bhikkhus went in a vehicle yoked with ...
cows and bulls, they were criticized by the lay people. The Buddha then established a fault of Wrong-doing for a bhikkhu to travel in a vehicle; later illness was exempted from this guideline…

“Travelling in a vehicle in the Buddha’s time was an extravagance. A strict application of this training in Thailand is not allowing bhikkhus to drive or own vehicles, and (officially) not to ride on motorcycles.” (HS ch.17)

Bhikkhus were allowed to use ferry boats, etc. (In Thailand, bhikkhus from riverside monasteries will go on alms round by boat.)

FAQ 13: “Does the Vinaya permit monks to practise herbal, traditional or ayurvedic medicine?”

A: In Thailand, I understand that one cannot be officially registered as a herbal doctor while still a bhikkhu. While providing medicines for one’s fellow monks is very much allowable, it is definitely wrong that a monk dispenses medicine for reward. (See Wrong Livelihood and End Note 115)

FAQ 14: “When a monk commits a pārājika offence, do the lay people have the right to ask him to disrobe? What is the usual procedure as stated in the Vinaya? What happens when a monk has been proven to have committed a pārājika offence, yet refuses to disrobe in spite of demands from lay devotees and there is no Sangha Council to enforce the demands, as is the case in non-Buddhist countries? Under such circumstances, what do the lay people do?”

A: If a bhikkhu commits a pārājika offence he is ‘defeated’ and no longer a bhikkhu even if he is wearing robes. The Community of bhikkhus will have nothing to do with him and will expel him. (See pp. 56, 53 and EN 31.) However, if the accused ‘bhikkhu’ does not admit to the offence and it cannot be proved, the results of kamma must be allowed to run their own course. Buddhism has never engaged in violent witch hunts. (See page 64.) And for how lay people dealt with stubborn monks in the Buddha’s time, see Disputes.

FAQ 15: “What questions should one ask a monk when offerings of requisites are made; and to what extent is a monk limited (and why) when making his reply; and when is it all right to ask details of preferences and specifications; and how to find out what is appropriate if the robed person finds it difficult or is unable to mention what is required?”

A: Generally, the right-practising bhikkhu will be a person of few wants for he is trying to go to the ending of all desire. However, there may be certain things he may need but may not mention until he is sure that the donors are completely sincere in their invitation. If the donor makes specific suggestions, the bhikkhu may refuse, he may accept, or he may remain silent—and such silence may very well be a positive response (as it was in the Lord Buddha’s time). Therefore, as the donor gets to know the bhikkhu he or she will become more sensitive about what is needed and what is appropriate—and be able to interpret any ‘silence’ in the right way. (See the section on Invitation; See also Beginner’s Question 12 above.)
PART TWO

Establishing a Background
THE AWAKENED MIND has gone beyond greed, hatred and delusion. Yet for those of us who are still striving towards this end such unskilful tendencies have to be addressed. We need guidelines to help us become more aware of our actions and speech, so that we do not go off the Buddha’s Middle Way. For a start there are the Five Precepts, then the Eight and the Ten Precepts[4], and then the 227 Pāṭimokkha Rules of the bhikkhu.

The Five Precepts are basic human ethical standards—answering the fundamental questions of ‘what do I do, what should I say?’ These standards are further refined by the Eight Precepts, which allow the lay person to live a life closer to that of the monk—even if temporarily.[14] This may then lead to the Ten Precepts of a novice (sāmañera) or of a dasasīla mata nun.

The Vinaya and Pāṭimokkha rules were set down by the Buddha in response to specific incidents that occurred either within the Community of bhikkhus or through their interaction with the lay community. An explanation of the original circumstances that led to the formulation of a rule is usually included in the scriptural text as an introduction to that rule. The emphasis therefore is always on Dhamma practice with the Precepts or Vinaya as a vital guide and support.

When a bhikkhu takes up the training rules, he might find that past habits and tendencies still cause problems—especially in a non-supportive environment. Of course, staying within a suitable environment will simplify this, which is a major reason for some rules. Therefore it is important to remember that the bhikkhu never practises in isolation and always needs the support and understanding of lay Buddhists. There is the need for mutual support and encouragement between the lay and bhikkhu communities. Knowing something of the rules should enable the lay person to appreciate this.
Buddhism has been said[15] to be ‘deeply rooted in a country when a local young man can become a bhikkhu, learn and then recite the Pāṭimokkha Rule in his own country’. This originally referred to Sri Lanka thousands of years ago but now that Buddhism is moving to the West such conditions are starting to appear there, too.

The Bhikkhu Saṅgha or Community of monks is probably the oldest of any of the institutions that have remained faithful to their origins and spread world-wide.[7] While scholars like to track its historical development from country to country, we could also start with a particular bhikkhu and trace the thread back through preceptor after preceptor to the Buddha Himself. Its many remarkable features enable men from different classes, backgrounds and cultures to live together in harmony and fellowship. Most important, it offers ideal conditions for the individual to train and meditate, to awaken to Dhamma, which is the whole point of the Buddha’s Teaching.
Becoming a Novice

The first part of the ordination procedure for bhikkhus is known as the Going Forth into Homelessness (pabbajjā). If it finishes with just that—without going on to the Questioning of the candidate and the Acceptance of him by all the gathered bhikkhus into the Bhikkhu Saṅgha—the candidate is known as a sāmañera or novice. This is usually the case when the candidate is less than the twenty years of age necessary to become a bhikkhu. A very young boy is not allowed to become a novice either, but the minimum age will vary according to place.

A sāmañera wears the ‘yellow robe’ like a full bhikkhu—except he does not have the saṅghāti (double-thickness robe)—and leads a very similar life. In some places a period as a novice forms part of the preliminary training to become a bhikkhu, while some men decide to remain sāmañera for various reasons. The sāmañera keeps the Ten Precepts and the 75 Training Rules (sekhiya) and some other rules of the bhikkhu. Later, when he is ready and if he is old enough, he can ask the bhikkhu community for full ordination (upasampadā).
Becoming a Bhikkhu

In the Pali texts, when a man decided to become a bhikkhu, he is often quoted as saying:

“Confined is the household life, a path of dust; the going forth is open and spacious. Not easy is it living in a house to lead the religious life absolutely fulfilled and purified, as polished as mother-of-pearl. Suppose I were to shave off my hair and beard, clothe myself in ochre robes and go forth from homelife into homelessness?”

(HS ch.19)

However, anyone wishing to become a bhikkhu must fulfil certain conditions about which he will be questioned during the actual ordination procedure. The candidate must be male and at least twenty years old. He must never have committed any grievous crimes and, if previously ordained, he must not have been guilty of any Defeater (Pārājika) offences or have entered some other religion without disrobing first. (See BMC pp.88–89) He should also be of good reputation; fit and healthy enough to carry out the duties of a bhikkhu; not in debt; not subject to government service; and have permission from parents or guardian.

The Ordination ceremony requires a prescribed boundary (sīma), a preceptor (upajjhāya) and a quorum of bhikkhus to validate the formal Sangha Act. In the formal procedure the candidate is examined as to the necessary qualities[19] and, if all the bhikkhus are satisfied, they receive him into the Sangha, the Community of Bhikkhus.

It is in this way that yet another link is added to the bhikkhu-lineage. Henceforth, the new bhikkhu can participate (and make up the necessary quorum) in future assemblies and help receive other new bhikkhus—as bhikkhus have continued to do for two and a half thousand years. (See EV,I,p.4; OP)

When a candidate requests full admission to the Community[20] (after the sāmaṇera ordination) he does not make any ‘lifetime vows’ but offers himself for training and instruction under his Preceptor’s guidance. At the end of the ordination ceremony, the Preceptor will immediately instruct the new bhikkhu (or arrange that he is properly taught) about the Pāṭimokkha Rule and the other principles that all bhikkhus should follow and observe.[21]

For the first five years a bhikkhu is called navaka (‘new one’) and he must live ‘dependent’ (nissaya) on a senior bhikkhu—either his preceptor or teacher (ācariya)—training in the ways of a bhikkhu. The preceptor and the new monk should be kind and helpful to each other, in almost a father-and-son relationship. A new bhikkhu who no longer lives under his preceptor must take another senior bhikkhu as his teacher and depend on him instead.[22]

For the next five years after his navaka period, the bhikkhu is called majjhima, (‘one in the middle’) and he is allowed to live by himself if he is accomplished in certain qualities.[23]

When a bhikkhu has completed ten Rains he is called Thera, which can be translated as ‘an elder who is worthy of respect’. If he is also accomplished in certain extra qualities,[24] he is allowed to give ordination as preceptor, to be a teacher, and have young monks live in dependence on him.
Throughout South East Asia, it is very common for young men to become bhikkhus (or novices) for a short period of their life. Traditionally this occurs during the three months of the Rains Retreat, after which they disrobe and return to lay life, hopefully knowing and appreciating much more about the bhikkhu life—and probably having friends still in the monastery whom they can visit for advice. In Thailand this means that while a small proportion of bhikkhus will spend all their life in the robe, many more Thai men will have tasted the life.

Such an ordination is also a rite of passage, for it is a family, even a village event with many people joining in to see the young man off into this new stage of his life. The new monk will frequently visit his former home on his daily alms round so his ordination has a wider influence, showing the continuing possibility of living the ‘Holy Life’ started by the Lord Buddha so long ago.

It may also be considered a way for the young man to show his gratitude to his parents and grandparents, for they are thought to participate and share in the ‘merit’ he makes through his ordination. Also, some men might ordain for a time before marriage—one way for the young man to prove his maturity to his fiancée—and then again later in life after retirement.
The Rains Retreat

The bhikkhu’s year is structured around the three months from July to October. In Asia this is the time of the monsoon season—the central period of the agricultural year—when the paddy fields are flooded and the main rice crop is planted. In the Buddha’s time (and until modern times), people were less likely to travel around during this period because the roads were bad and there was a danger of crop damage. So the bhikkhus likewise suspended their mendicant wanderings and had to settle in one place.

A bhikkhu must make a formal determination to be resident at dawn every day in that place for the whole three month period. (There are exceptional circumstances when he may be allowed to be away, but even then he should return within seven days.) These three months are often a special time of study or meditation and so are sometimes known as the Rains Retreat or Rains Residence. This is also the normal time when the young men of South East Asia become monks for the traditional three month period. (See above!)

A bhikkhu often measures the length of time he has been a monk according to how many Rains Residences he has undertaken. Therefore instead of saying he has been ‘ordained seven years’ he might say he has been ordained for ‘seven Rains’.
Disrobing

Living the bhikkhu-life properly, following the Buddha’s Teaching, requires full commitment and sustained effort. If this is lost and his Dhamma friends cannot rekindle his interest, the bhikkhu is always at liberty to return to lay life. There are no lifetime vows, so perhaps living a good lay life is better than being lax in keeping the bhikkhu’s rules. Nevertheless, in some countries there is a cultural expectation of ‘ordaining for life’ and a corresponding stigma attached to disrobing.

“A bhikkhu who is tired of the practice of the Brahma-cariya [Holy Life] and wishes to return to the state of being a lay man may do this by taking leave of the training…” (EV, IIIp237)

Disrobing is finalized by the monk clearly proclaiming his change of status before another bhikkhu or lay person. Once the other person understands his statement, he is no longer a bhikkhu. In Thailand there is often a formal ceremony for this that ends with the former monk undertaking the Five Precepts to replace the 227 Pāṭimokkha Rule. (This is also considered a step downwards, for the ideal way is certainly to continue with the Holy Life ‘for as long as life lasts’.)

In those countries where temporary ordinations are ‘rites of passage’, some men may ordain and disrobe several times in their life—before marriage and after retirement, for example. However, there seems to be a tradition that bhikkhus do not disrobe and go forth again more than seven times, but this rarely occurs.

If a bhikkhu commits a Defeater Offence there is no need for him formally to disrobe because he is automatically expelled by his wrongful action and is no longer a bhikkhu from that moment.[31] He can never reordain during that lifetime.

Buddhist Nuns

This book is really only concerned with bhikkhus.[27] In the Theravāda lineage it seems that the bhikkhunī ordination lineage for women given by the Buddha—equivalent to bhikkhu-ordination for men—was lost in Sri Lanka with the fall of Anuradhapura in Sri Lanka in the eleventh century C.E. and finally with the fall of Pagan in the thirteenth century C.E. Bhikkhunīs originally observed 311 Pāṭimokkha Rules, and there are whole sections of the Pāli Vinaya texts devoted to their rules.
The Vinaya and the Patimokkha

The Pali Vinaya texts are contained in five large volumes. The Sutta-Vibhaṅga division comprises the two books that contain the 227 Pāṭimokkha Rules (and those for bhikkhunīs) with the stories of their origin and other explanations. The next two books, the Mahāvagga and Cullavagga of the Khandhaka division:

“...contain a great variety of procedural material dealing with such important Sangha functions as giving the Going Forth and Acceptance, the recitation of the Pāṭimokkha and the keeping of the Rains Residence, as well as a great deal of material relating to bhikkhu’s requisites, such as lodgings, medicines, clothing, etc.” (HS ch. 7)

The last book (the Parivāra) is a form of appendix or supplement.

So the 227 Pāṭimokkha Rules are a part of the greater Vinaya. As Ven. Thiradhammo remarks:

“...the Pāṭimokkha is more like the bare bones or skeleton of the Vinaya Piṭaka [Basket]. Without reference to the explanations of the Sutta-Vibhaṅga or the elaboration of the Khandhakas this skeleton has no viable application!” (HS ch.7)
The Buddha laid down that on full and new moon days all the bhikkhus in residence in the same community must come together in a formal meeting. If there is a quorum of at least four bhikkhus, they should listen to the full Pāṭimokkha Rule. A competent bhikkhu who has learnt this by heart will recite it in the Pāli language for the Community so that they can remind themselves of their responsibilities in keeping the major 227 Rules. The complete recitation may take anywhere from thirty-five minutes to an hour, depending on the skill of the reciting bhikkhu.

Before the Pāṭimokkha recitation begins, each bhikkhu should admit to any offences that he knows he has committed by formally telling another monk (or monks). Once this is accomplished, the monk is considered ‘pure’ and can listen to the recitation of the rules. (The recitation includes questions, asking if any bhikkhu present is guilty of the offences.) In many communities it is normal for each bhikkhu to make a ‘general confession’ of all possible offences to another bhikkhu before listening to the Pāṭimokkha recitation.

Different offences are of different seriousness but the most common faults committed by carelessness or mistake can be cleared by ‘confession’ to another bhikkhu. Admitting to one’s mistake and agreeing to do better in the future is the way of growth and progress towards the elimination of all carelessness and absentmindedness.
Offences

When a bhikkhu breaks his precepts or rules[30] it is called an offence (āpatti). Such offences are committed by action or word, although intention is (almost always) a decisive factor. Just thinking about doing something wrong is unskillful and may lead to future problems but it is not an offence. We will be examining some of these rules in the following pages.

Major Rule Groups of the Patimokkha

a) The Four Pārājika—The Defeaters

The new bhikkhu is told about the Pārājika Offences immediately after ordination,[21], so he fully knows that they are the most serious of all the offences and that the consequences of transgressing them causes him to be no longer a bhikkhu. The nature of the act that breaks any of these four Pārājika rules clearly reveals that the bhikkhu is no longer interested in developing the subtle and refined way of Dhamma. The alternative of voluntarily disrobing is always available if he feels he can no longer keep the Rule and this is considered a much better way to handle this sort of overwhelming desire.
A monk automatically falls from being a bhikkhu[31] by committing any of these four offences of Defeat: sexual-intercourse, murder, major-theft, or falsely claiming supernormal abilities. A bhikkhu who falls into any of these four Defeater offences thereby severs himself irrevocably from the bhikkhu community and is no longer considered a bhikkhu. The text portrays it with some vivid similes showing their irreparable nature: as ‘a man with his head cut off’; as ‘a withered leaf fallen from its stem’; as ‘a palm tree cut down’; as ‘a broken stone’. For while all the other offences can be remedied, these four are terminal.

b) The Thirteen Saṅghādisesa—Requiring Formal Meetings of the Community

This is a very serious class of offence. However, any offending bhikkhu can be rehabilitated through confession and supervised probation. Finally, the bhikkhu needs to be reinstated by a specially convened Community (Saṅgha) meeting of at least twenty monks.[32]

c) The Two Aniyata—Indefinite or Undetermined

The Bhikkhu Community (together with the bhikkhu concerned) have to decide which rule, if any, has been infringed.
d) The 30 Nissaggiya Pācittiya—Confession with Forfeiture

These rules are often concerned with bhikkhus being greedy and excessive in their demand for offerings, or with bhikkhus obtaining requisites through improper means. This oppresses lay donors and, classically, led them to comment: “How can these recluses … not knowing moderation ask for … ?” The rules of this category also guide bhikkhus on how they should take care of requisites and restrain the bhikkhus from obtaining items that by their very nature are inappropriate. This offence can be cleared by forfeiture of the improper item to another bhikkhu(s) and formal confession of the offence.

The other classes of offences can usually be resolved by a simple ‘confession’ to another bhikkhu(s). They are:

e) The 92 Pācittiya—Expiation through Confession

All these offences can be cleared through confession to another bhikkhu.

f) The Four Pāṭidesanīya—to be Acknowledged
g) The 75 Sekhiyavatta—Trainings

These are normally classified as offences of ‘wrong-doing’ (dukkaṭa). There are two aspects to these ‘rules of training’ which are mainly about etiquette and good manners. First, they are a ‘gauge’ for the bhikkhu’s mindfulness so that he becomes aware of his behaviour. Second, there is the external perspective of an observer watching the bhikkhu’s activity and noticing the care and refinement with which he moves, eats, etc. (For example, see page 172.)

h) The Seven Adhikaraṇasamatha—Settlement of Issues

These are general procedures (rather than offences) for dealing with disputes, accusations, offences and duties. (See BMC p.511)

In the full Vinaya texts there is also the class of ‘grave’ (thullaccaya) offence. This is a ‘derived offence’ from the most serious rules of Pārājika and Saṅghādisesa (groups (a) and (b) above) to cover those circumstances when the full offence is not quite carried out but the conduct is still grave enough to be at fault. There is also the dubbhāsita offence of wrong speech.
Committed Offences

The Lord Buddha would not set down a rule until the situation demanded it, so the Pāli often supplies the ‘origin story’ about how the different rules came about. Certain characters often reappear in the thick of misdeeds and mischief. For instance, one keeps on coming across Venerable Udāyin or the notorious ‘group-of-six’ monks. Their behaviour[33] required attention and rectification from the Buddha, who then made it into a general rule for all the bhikkhus:

“In that case, bhikkhus, I will formulate a training rule for the bhikkhus with ten aims in mind: the excellence of the Community, the peace of the Community, the curbing of the shameless, the comfort of the well-behaved bhikkhus, the restraint of [defilements] related to the present life, the prevention of [defilements] related to the next life, the arousing of faith in the faithless, the increase in the faithful, the establishment of the true Dhamma, and the fostering of discipline.” (BMC p.5)
Later circumstances may have required the Buddha to make amendments or special exceptions and the rule would then have been adjusted accordingly.\[34\] There are also many other minor offences mentioned in the original Pāli texts, which have been further enlarged upon by later Commentaries. So the range of rules has become very extensive, and their observance and interpretation correspondingly wide.

Note that it was often lay people’s criticism that brought the monk’s wrong doings to the attention of the Buddha. (However, also notice how such criticism was often too hasty in blaming all monks rather than just the original delinquent.)
Modernization? The Great Standards

More than two and a half thousand years have passed since the Vinaya rules were originally set down by the Buddha, and many things have markedly changed since then. Should the rules be modernized and brought up to date? How can this be done?

Already during His lifetime, the Buddha made special allowances for different regions (or desa) outside the ‘Middle Country’ of North India—where He lived and taught. These dealt with both the workings of the Community—for example, a smaller quorum for ordination is allowed in distant parts where there are fewer monks—and practical measures, such as special dispensation for footwear and bathing. (See EV,II,p.173) So there is a precedent for adapting to conditions, but this does not mean the abolishing of any rules.[6]

The Lord Buddha also left us a set of principles that can still be used as a standard to judge new circumstances. [35] These are known as ‘The Great Standards’. Properly used they should protect against a wholesale dilution of the Rule.[36]
This is how the Great Standards are formulated:

“Bhikkhus, whatever I have not objected to, saying, ‘This is not allowable,’ if it fits in with what is not allowable, if it goes against what is allowable, that is not allowable for you.

“Whatever I have not objected to, saying, ‘This is not allowable,’ if it fits in with what is allowable, if it goes against what is not allowable, that is allowable for you.

“And whatever I have not permitted, saying, ‘This is allowable,’ if it fits in with what is not allowable, if it goes against what is allowable, that is not allowable for you.

“And whatever I have not permitted, saying, ‘This is allowable,’ if it fits in with what is allowable, if it goes against what is not allowable, that is allowable for you.” (BMC p.27; see also EV, II, p170)

Treated with care, these Great Standards should enable bhikkhus to live according to the Vinaya Rule in, for example, isolated communities in non-Buddhist countries with non-tropical climates. They form a touchstone for modern conditions and substances.
Strictness and Blaming Others

Among the unenlightened, finding fault with others (rather than dealing with one’s own problems) often seems to be one of our most damaging habitual tendencies. We are able to twist whatever we want to this purpose. (Including the book that you are reading.) For bhikkhus there are many cautions:

“… those [monks] who follow the Vinaya blindly … tend to be proud and arrogant, regarding themselves as better behaved and more strict than others, and despising other bhikkhus as inferior. This in itself is unbecoming and worthy of censure; and when such bhikkhus have to associate with others whom they feel to be deficient in observing the Vinaya, they do it grudgingly and with a sense of distaste, and thus bring even more trouble on themselves.

“As for the bhikkhu who behaves in the correct manner, he is bound to feel cheerful because he senses that his behaviour is becoming.”

(OP p.11)
“One who knows the Vinaya well, knows just how far the Vinaya goes. He will thus know what is definite and what is open to interpretation. He will know that a monk who practises contrary to what is clearly stated in the Vinaya … is rightly called alajjī [shameless]. But he will remain tolerant and in perfect harmony with those who follow a different practice from his own on matters not clearly covered by the Vinaya …”

(AB)

Disparate interpretations of the Vinaya rules can lead different communities into claiming that only their understanding is correct and everyone else is wrong. (See Disputes.) The Buddhist Monastic Code has this to say:

“There is, of course, a danger in being too independent in interpreting the tradition, in that strongly held opinions can lead to disharmony in the Community. … At the same time, … there are many areas on which the Vibhaṅga [section of the Vinaya] is unclear and lends itself to a variety of equally valid interpretations. For proof of this, we need only look at the various traditions that have developed in the different Theravadin countries, and even within each country. For some reason, although people tend to be very tolerant of different interpretations of the Dhamma, they can be very intolerant of different interpretations of the Vinaya and can get into heated arguments over minor issues having very little to do with the training of the mind.”

Venerable Thanissaro continues by emphasizing:

“... that any interpretation based on a sound reading of the [Pāli] Canon should be respected: that each bhikkhu should follow the interpretations of the Community in which he is living, as long as they do not conflict with the Canon, so as to avoid conflict over minor matters in daily life; and that he should also show respect for the differing interpretations of other Communities where they too do not conflict with the Canon, so as to avoid the pitfalls of pride and narrow-mindedness.”

(BMC p.15)

In the modern West we find ourselves with the unusual (unique?) situation of having Buddhist monasteries and temples of so many different countries and traditions so close at hand. We should appreciate this abundance and variety, deciding which establishment suits our needs and then not worry about the shortcomings of other places.
PART THREE

The Patimokkha Rules
The Patimokkha Rules

Having established a background, we will now turn to the rules themselves. Rather than following the traditional listing, we will group rules (of varying seriousness) together under five headings, which might pertain to, or be of interest to, lay people:

I Harmlessness

II Relationships

III Possessions and Offerings

IV Right Livelihood for a Bhikkhu

V Miscellaneous

For other Patimokkha Rules not covered here, see Appendix B
Throughout its history, Buddhism has been renowned for its tolerance and compassion towards all living beings and this is reflected in the Buddhist monks’ Vinaya. Their rules cover situations of causing harm ranging from murder—which is universally accepted as a crime—to such things as destroying plant life.
Murder

The third Defeater (Pārājika) Offence deals with murder. The original story describes how some bhikkhus wrongly grasped the Buddha’s meditation teaching on the loathsome aspects of the body[38] and, falling into wrong view, committed suicide or asked someone to end their lives for them. The rule can be summarized like this:

“Intentionally bringing about the untimely death of a human being, even if it is still a foetus, is [an offence of Defeat.]”

(Summary Pār. 3; BMC p.78)

A bhikkhu must not recommend killing, suicide or help arrange a murder.[39] Also, because in this rule a human being is defined as beginning with the human foetus, counting “from the time consciousness first arises in the womb”, he must not advise or arrange an abortion.

There is no offence if death is caused accidentally or without intention.[40]
Killing

The previous offence was one of Defeat for murder whereas this rule is one of Confession (pācittiya) for killing animals. It originally arose because Venerable Udāyin, a frequent delinquent, detested crows so much that he shot them with arrows and then displayed their cut-off heads.

“Deliberately killing an animal—or having it killed—is [an offence of Confession].”
(Summary Pāc. 61; BMC p.423)

‘Animal’ here is pāno, literally ‘having breath’. The Commentary explains that it includes living beings down to the size of a bedbug. Elsewhere the texts forbid the killing of “even an ant”.

One of the bhikkhu’s requisites is a water filter. This is employed to prevent the killing of (visible) waterborne creatures when making use of water from a well or stream. Practically, this also leads bhikkhus to take extra care that they cover water jars or regularly change water so that mosquito larvae do not have opportunity to breed. This shows how the Vinaya Rule emphasizes care and forethought as ‘preventive medicine’.

There are two rules concerned with bhikkhus and their use of water:
One of these offences was originally perpetrated by the notorious ‘group-of-six’ monks who used water that contained living beings. It can be summarized:

“Using water, knowing that it contains living beings that will die from one’s use, is [an offence of Confession.]” (Pāc. 62; BMC p.424)

In the second offence the monks of Āḷavī were doing repairs and ‘sprinkled grass and clay’ with water that they knew contained life. It is summarized:

“If a bhikkhu knows that water contains living beings but still pours it out onto grass or earth it is [an offence of Confession.] Also pouring—or having it poured—into such water anything that would kill the beings therein is [an offence of Confession.]”

(Pāc. 20; See BMC p.319)

Intention is an essential factor here. For example, if a bhikkhu only intends to sweep a path but accidentally kills ants in the process, there is no offence because it is not deliberate. However, ordering an animal to be killed (and it is) is an offence. (Also, if he suspects that that animal was killed to provide him with food, it is an offence to eat it. See page 131.)
Destroying Vegetation

The common belief at the time of the Buddha was that plants (and even soil) were ‘one-facultied life’. Today we have ecologically ‘green’ beliefs that are often equivalent—at least they seem to lead to much the same attitudes.[41] (In Thailand, forest monks are well known as the best protectors of the jungle.)

The eleventh Confession offence concerns destroying plant life. It originated because a bhikkhu harmed ‘one-facultied life’ by cutting down trees. He continued to cut down a tree even when the tree-deva[42] asked him to stop, so she went and complained to the Buddha. This led to lay criticism of such behaviour and a rule was set down:

“Intentionally damaging or destroying a living plant is [an offence of Confession.]” (Summary Pāc. 11; See BMC p.294)

Therefore destroying a living plant—for instance, felling a tree, uprooting a flower, burning grass—is a Confession offence; as is picking fruit from a tree, a flower from a bush, etc. It is an offence of wrong-doing (dukkāṭa) to damage or destroy fertile seeds or pips, or viable seedlings. (See Kappiya.)
Bhikkhus who live in tropical forest monasteries constantly have to protect both the jungle and themselves. When paths are overgrown, snakes and other dangerous ‘creepy-crawlies’ can be trodden on—and bite back! There also may be a need for firebreaks. One way that forest monks cope with this is a daily routine of sweeping the paths. However they are not allowed to dig or clear the land.

The tenth Confession offence arose when bhikkhus dug the ground and got others to dig, and the local people criticized them because they considered the earth to be ‘one-facultied life’. The rule is phrased like this:

“Should any bhikkhu dig soil or have it dug, it is [an offence of Confession.]”                   (Pāc. 10; BMC p.292)

Digging, breaking the surface of the earth, lighting a fire on it, pounding a stake into it are all disallowed. (If such ‘earth’ is more gravel or sand than ‘soil’—and has no living creatures in it—it may then be dug.)

It is, however, allowable for monks to hint to laypeople or novices about what needs doing as long as the words or gestures fall short of a command. When bhikkhus need paths to be cleared, necessary work done on the ground, firebreaks made, etc., any lay attendant wanting to help should listen out for hints and indications: ‘A post hole dug over there would be useful’; ‘make this ground allowable’, etc. What is needed can then be clarified.

One practical and long term effect of these rules is that they have steered bhikkhus away from involvement in agriculture and land ownership. Such a development would also have isolated bhikkhus from the lay community because they would no longer have needed to depend on alms food.
(II) RELATIONSHIPS

BHIKKHUS CANNOT LIVE in complete isolation from lay people, for the mutual support relationship is intrinsic to their way of life. However, it should never become an intimate relationship for this goes against the whole purpose of leaving the ‘family life’ with its endless ‘enclosed’ complications.[43]

The ‘Holy Life’ or Brahmacariya is one that checks the display of any form of sexual desire through the actions and speech of the bhikkhu. (In fact restraint from gross sexual misconduct is already part of the Five Precepts.[4] The Eight and Ten Precepts immediately refine this and then the Vinaya manages it with even greater subtlety.) One’s Dhamma life can then advance towards the ending of all desire through mind development and meditation. The most potent object for such sexual desire, that which the mind is most tenaciously grasping after, is usually associated with the opposite sex, so many rules involve this relationship.[44]
Sexual Intercourse

The first offence of all the 227 listed rules of the Pāṭimokkha concerns a bhikkhu engaging in sexual intercourse. It remains a hot issue, perhaps even more so today, going by the number of sexual scandals that rock the Buddhist religious world in both the East and the West. As Venerable Thiradhammo writes:

“While some of the guidelines may seem somewhat rigid or prudish, it is important to reflect upon the volatility and durability of rumour, even if untrue. The incessant sex-scandals in religious circles may provide a sufficient incentive to encourage the greatest measure of prevention and discretion.” (HS ch.13)

The rule was originally laid down because of Venerable Sudinna. He was the son of a rich merchant, who left home to become a bhikkhu only after great opposition from his family. He went away to practise Dhamma and when he came back to visit sometime later, his parents were overjoyed to see him and plotted to lure him back into the lay life again. They invited him for a meal and then laid out their wealth in front of him, piled up in two huge heaps of gold, while the wife he had left behind dressed herself in her most irresistibly alluring way. Venerable Sudinna remained unmoved by all of this. After telling them to throw the gold away in the river, he called his former wife, “Sister”. Nevertheless, when his elderly mother pleaded with him at least to give them an heir, he foolishly gave in and had sexual intercourse with his former wife.

This First Defeater Offence is summarized:

“A bhikkhu who engages in any form of sexual intercourse is Defeated.” (Pār. 1; See BMC p.45)

Every form and variety of sexual intercourse with sexual penetration—whether genital, oral or anal, whether with woman, man or animal—is forbidden. The penalty is the heaviest one of Pārājika or Defeat.
Intimacy—Touching

The modern West has stories of sexual harassment, so the ways that the Buddha dealt with such matters should not seem so very strange.

If a bhikkhu touches a woman in a sexual way, he commits a very serious offence requiring formal meetings of the Community and probation (Saṅghādisesa). (See page 59.) The scrupulous bhikkhu wants to remain above suspicion so, if he can, he will avoid all physical contact. (Hence his attitude to shaking hands. This also explains why in Thailand a receiving cloth is used to receive offerings from women. (See EN 85)

The rule was first set down by the Buddha after a brahmin and his wife had gone to inspect Ven. Udāyin’s fine dwelling. As Ven. Udāyin was showing them around, he came up behind the lady and “rubbed up against her limb by limb”. After they had left, the husband praised Ven. Udāyin but the wife was critical and explained what had happened. The brahmin then complained, “Isn’t it even possible to take one’s wife to a monastery without her being molested?” This rule was then set down:
“Should any bhikkhu, overcome by lust, with altered mind, engage in bodily contact with a woman, or in holding her hand, holding a lock of her hair, or caressing any of her limbs, it entails initial and subsequent meetings of the Community.” (Saṅgh. 2; BMC p.100)

To be at fault, the bhikkhu must usually do some action to bring contact with a woman while lust overcomes his mind.[45] If he accidentally stumbles and bumps into a woman or vice-versa, or if he is accosted by a woman, as long as there is no intention to come into lustful contact there is no offence. However, the average bhikkhu’s mind tends to be so quick and unruly—he is, after all, still in training and therefore unenlightened—that he may prefer to be super-cautious about such situations.

If a bhikkhu touches his mother out of affection, then this is still an offence but the lesser one of wrong-doing (dukkata).[46] While gratitude to parents was strongly emphasized by the Buddha, the bhikkhu having left the home-life and his family should not cling to worldly relationships. The only true way for him to fulfil his filial obligations is by gaining insight into Dhamma and then teaching his parents.

If a bhikkhu is acting with lustful intentions, he incurs a grave (thullaccāya) offence for making bodily contact with a paṇḍaka (‘sex-aberrant’) and an offence of wrong-
The previous rules dealt with the bhikkhu’s physical actions, the next two rules are offences—again of the very serious category—that concern his wrong speech towards women.

Flirting

This rule came into being when many women visitors came together to look over Ven. Udāyin’s dwelling. He spoke to them in a lewd, flirtatious way so that some of them said, “It is improper. Even from our husbands we wouldn’t like to hear this sort of thing”. Therefore, the Buddha laid down this rule:

“Should any bhikkhu, overcome by lust, with altered mind, address lewd words to a woman in the manner of young men to a young woman alluding to sexual intercourse, it entails initial and subsequent meetings of the Community.” (Saṅgh. 3; BMC p.110)
Propositioning

THE FOLLOWING RULE is very relevant today when some misguidedly believe that submitting to sex with spiritual teachers can help in their spiritual development.

Again, it was originally a lustful Ven. Udāyin who was the cause of this offence. This time, he suggested to a beautiful and devout woman follower that she make a ‘special offering’ to him, that of sexual intercourse. The Buddha then set forth this rule:

“Telling a woman that she would benefit from having sexual intercourse with oneself is [an offence requiring initial and subsequent meetings of the Community.]” (Summary [47] Saṅgh. 4; BMC p.117)

Matchmaking

THE MAJOR ISSUE TODAY seems more to centre around divorce and the breakdown of marriage rather than arranging marriages. However one should note how these affairs can involve the bhikkhu and how he should guard against becoming too drawn in. (It is also noteworthy that this is considered one of the most serious offences.)

Ven. Udāyin caused this rule to be set down because he involved himself in arranging many marriages and liaisons. When some of these failed, they blamed him for the failure. The offence is summarized:

"Should any bhikkhu engage in conveying a man’s intentions to a woman or a woman’s intentions to a man, proposing marriage or paramourage—even if only for a momentary liaison—it entails initial and subsequent meetings of the Community." (Saṅgh. 5; BMC p.117)

A bhikkhu should not officiate at weddings, except perhaps to chant a blessing afterwards and encourage the newly married couple to lead virtuous and faithful lives together based in generosity, virtue and meditation. He also has to be circumspect when counselling couples. (There is no offence in reconciling a married but estranged couple as long as they are not yet divorced.)
A bhikkhu not only has to be impeccable but also must be seen to be so. He sets an example for everyone and therefore must be beyond reproach. Any doubtful situations have to be clarified, which is how the next rules came about. Some knowledge of these rules may also help to explain the sometimes seemingly antisocial attitude of some bhikkhus. (When bhikkhus are reluctant to enter into too private a conversation, it may reflect the unsuitability of the time and place for such a meeting.)

There are two aspects to these particular rules: physical closeness and private conversation (see below Talking Privately). If a woman sees a monk who is sitting alone and she wants to sit close to him, or she wants to have a one-to-one conversation with him, the following rules have to be taken into account.

First, the rules dealing with intimate proximity:

The Two Aniyata, Indefinite or Undetermined Cases, were formulated after Ven. Udāyin went to visit a recently married young woman. He sat privately with her, in a secluded place, just the two of them, talking about worldly affairs. The respected female lay-follower, Visākhā, saw them sitting there and said to Ven. Udāyin, “This is improper, Ven. Sir, and unsuitable, that the master should sit in private like this. Although, Ven. Sir, the master may have no desire for sexual intercourse, there are unbelieving people who are difficult to convince.”

The Buddha therefore set this down:

“Should any bhikkhu sit in private, alone with a woman in a seat secluded enough to lend itself (to the sexual act), so that a female lay follower whose word can be trusted, having seen (them), might describe it as constituting any of the three cases—involving either Defeat, [Community Meetings], or [Confession]—then the bhikkhu, acknowledging having sat (there), may be dealt with for any of the three cases… or he may be dealt with for whichever case the female lay follower described. This case is undetermined.”

(Aniyata 1; BMC p.157)

The Second Indefinite Offence is similar to the first, except that the place is less secluded and therefore not suitable for sexual intercourse although it could still be grounds for the other sexual offences, such as “addressing a woman with lewd words”.
When a bhikkhu intentionally sits alone with a woman in a secluded or private place (as in the above two rules) it can lead on to more intimate behaviour or at least to misunderstandings from unexpected onlookers. To preclude such problems a bhikkhu needs a companion or ‘chaperone’. [50]

A ‘secluded place’ is where a monk and women can sit (or lie down) on a seat together in a place that is hidden from view and out of earshot, for example, a private room or behind a wall or hedge. In such circumstances, a man or boy old enough to understand what is inappropriate conduct must be also present as chaperone. Therefore, if a woman—or women, for according to this particular rule (Aniyata 1) it does not matter how many there are—sees a bhikkhu sitting alone in such a very secluded place, she should remember about this rule and not go and sit with him but await a more suitable time or find a male to act as chaperone.

A less secluded but still ‘private place’ (Aniyata 2) would be, for example, a bench in a deserted park or a glassed-in porch or any other place that is private but not secluded enough for sexual intercourse. (BMC p.389) In this case, the Commentary allows the chaperone to be either male or female but they must be someone who knows ‘what is and what is not lewd’ and they must be ‘within sight’. However if the monk and woman talk together the chaperone must be male because of the relevant rule about that. (See Talking Privately below.)

The following ‘Confession Rules’ connect with the above ‘Indefinite Rules’. (See explanations above for definitions of a ‘secluded’ and a ‘private place’.)

The forty-fourth Confession Offence originated when the husband of a woman denounced Ven. Upananda for sitting alone in a ‘secluded place’ with his wife. The ruling:

“Sitting or lying down with a woman or women in a private, secluded place with no other man present is [an offence of Confession.]”

(Summarized Pāc. 44; BMC p.385)

The next Confession Offence follows on with Ven. Upananda, this time, being caught sitting alone with the man’s wife in a ‘private place’. This time the ruling is:

“Should any bhikkhu sit in private, alone with a woman,[51] it is [an offence of Confession.]”

(Pāc. 45; BMC p.389)

Therefore as with the Indefinite Offences above there needs to be a chaperone present.
Talking Privately

The previous rules dealt with physical proximity whereas this next rule concerns a bhikkhu and woman talking alone. It might appear strange that a rule should completely forbid confidential interviews with a bhikkhu alone. Yet if one reflects on how things have regularly gone wrong with such private spiritual counselling, it is easier to see that being safe is better than sorry—for the sake of everyone involved. Even if their conduct is completely pure, it still may lead to rumour and criticism.

The seventh Confession offence arose when Ven. Udāyin went to visit lay supporters. He sat close to the mother of the family at the front door, teaching her Dhamma in a quiet, confidential manner, and then approached the daughter-in-law who was by the side door and spoke to her in the same way. Both women mistakenly thought that he was flirting with the other, and criticized him, saying that Dhamma should be given in a clear and open way. As a result the Buddha eventually laid down that:

"Teaching more than six sentences [vācā] of Dhamma to a woman, except in response to a question, is [an offence of Confession] unless a knowledgeable man is present." (Summarized Pāc. 7; BMC p.285)

There are different interpretations as to exactly what is meant by ‘six sentences’, for the Pāli word वाचा can mean ‘word’, ‘saying’ or ‘speech’. Even if there are many women, but no other man, it is still considered an offence.

One can see from the origin of this rule that the point (again) is not that women cannot be taught Dhamma but that it should be done in a way that is completely open and above misinterpretation.

Staying Together

The next rule deals with the proximity of bhikkhus and women at night. There are different interpretations of this rule and as it is a frequently asked question extra translations with some discussion will be included. (There is also a rule about a bhikkhu sleeping in the same lodging as an unordained man, see (b) below.)

(a) This rule originally arose when Ven. Anuruddha—one of the most highly accomplished disciples of the Buddha—was travelling and asked the woman who owned a travellers’ rest house if he could stay the night. She readily agreed and when more travellers arrived and Ven. Anuruddha let them share the room, she invited him to come and sleep inside instead. She had, however, become infatuated with him and tried to seduce him. When she saw that Ven. Anuruddha was completely unmoved, she came to her senses and asked his forgiveness. Ven. Anuruddha then gave her a Dhamma talk which so delighted her that she took refuge in the Triple Gem.

Here are several translations:

“If a bhikkhu sleeps in a place where there is a surrounding wall and under the same roof with a woman, even for one night, it is [an offence of Confession.]” (Pāc. 6; Nv p.14)

“A monk who lies down with a female in the same building under the same roof and within walls, which are complete or almost complete, commits [a Confession Offence.]” (Pāc. 6; BBC p.120)

“Lying down at the same time in the same lodging with a woman is [an offence of Confession.]” (Pāc. 6; BMC p.280)

There are complications concerning how this rule should be applied to modern conditions, for example:

“Houses in tropical climates are often constructed without the system of doors and rooms found in colder climates, hence the importance of this rule. Bhikkhus obliged to stay in a Western-type house with lockable rooms in places where no [monastery] exists, as must sometimes happen during Dhammaduta [Spreading-Dhamma] work, will hardly be included here.” (Pāt. 1966 Ed.; p106)

“The Commentary (Samantapāsādika) further explains that when there are many rooms in a single building—such as in a block of flats or apartments—the ‘same sleeping place’ is only those rooms which have a common ‘entrance’ (upacāra). It continues by explaining that an ‘entrance’ is where one washes one’s feet before entering a set of rooms. Now each flat/apartment usually has a doormat on which one wipes one’s feet before entering the flat/apartment and therefore, following the Commentary, the doormat marks the ‘entrance’ (upacāra) of a single ‘same-sleeping-place’. In other words, separate flats/apartments become separate sleeping places for the purposes of this rule.” (AB)[54]

So there are different interpretations as to exactly what is meant by ‘same place’. For example, does a locked door make a room a separate place? The Commentary suggests that if a building is divided into units that are not connected and each has a separate entrance, then each unit counts as a ‘place’. Therefore apartment blocks would be allowable. And hospitals?
In the West, where there are few monasteries, visiting bhikkhus have to decide how to follow these rules. It is not just a question of being strict but also about how it looks to lay people. Will they be suspicious about a bhikkhu staying too close to women? How will they feel if he stays in an expensive hotel room? A good standard is probably:

“...since the Canon gives no clear guidance on this point, the wise policy for an individual bhikkhu is to follow the views of the Community to which he belongs.” (BMC p.274)

(b) The fifth Confession Rule is similar to the sixth, but it is concerned with bhikkhus staying overnight in the same dwelling with men. It arose when some newly ordained bhikkhus lay down and slept in the common meeting hall in the presence of lay people because there were not enough dwelling places[55] for the younger monks. These bhikkhus were “careless, thoughtless, naked, mumbling, snoring”. The lay people criticized them so the Buddha prohibited monks from sleeping under the same roof as lay people. However, later he found that the novice Rahula was having to sleep in an outside toilet because there was otherwise no room, so he relaxed the rule to allow for a temporary stay together.
“Lying down at the same time, in the same lodging, with a novice or layman for more than three nights running is [an offence of Confession].”

(Summary Pāc. 5; BMC p.276)

Travelling Together

The next point to deal with is that of a bhikkhu travelling with a woman. This is also a very practical question and is often asked about.

In the Buddha’s time, a bhikkhu was about to set out on a journey when he met a woman who has just quarrelled with her husband. She asked where he was going and if she could accompany him. He agreed. The husband then appeared, searching for his wife. He heard that she had gone off with a monk and assumed that they were lovers, so when he caught up with the pair he thrashed the bhikkhu before explanations could be made. When the husband realized his mistake, he apologized to the bhikkhu. Therefore this rule was set down:

“Travelling by arrangement with a woman from one village to another is [an offence of Confession.]”

(Summarised Pāc. 67; BMC p.434)
Modern practice differs according to the Community so lay women should bear this rule in mind when arranging transport for bhikkhus, or going to the same place as them. Reluctance by a bhikkhu to arrange such journeys might also be explained by this rule. For example:

“…it seems reasonable, as there is some uncertainty [as to whether it applies to more than just one monk and one woman,] to be more lenient allowing a journey with one or more women as long as there is at least one male accompanying the monk and the journey is not long. For example, a woman driving two monks in her car to an invitation in the next village seems no more reprehensible than two monks sitting down talking Dhamma to the women, but two women driving across Australia with two monks could be a cause for concern.”

(AB)
The term ‘bhikkhu’ is defined as ‘almsman’, or ‘mendicant’. He is one who depends on others for his material needs. This relationship of ‘right livelihood’ incurs responsibilities: the bhikkhu must receive and use offerings in the right way, whereas the lay devotee should make material offerings in the right way and receive Dhamma teachings in the right way. (See also [Wrong Livelihood], page 178.) The lay person gives material support, which the bhikkhu properly receives and uses in his Dhamma practice so he can eventually reciprocate with the ‘highest of gifts’—Dhamma.

The proper needs of a bhikkhu and how they are supplied is extensively covered in the Vinaya Rule. If all bhikkhus were enlightened, we obviously would need few guidelines. However, most monks are still in the process of learning how to completely eradicate greed, anger and delusion, so ‘possessions’ misused can easily lead to unskilful states of mind.
The Buddha said that there were four necessities of life—clothing, food, lodging and medicine—and that they have to be treated properly:

“Properly considering the robe, I use it: simply to ward off cold, to ward off heat, to ward off the touch of flies, mosquitoes, simply for the purpose of covering the parts of the body that cause shame.

“Properly considering almsfood, I use it: not playfully, nor for intoxication, nor for putting on weight, nor for beautification; but simply for the survival and continuance of this body, for ending its afflictions, for the support of the chaste life, (thinking) I will destroy old feelings (of hunger) and not create new feelings (from overeating). Thus I will maintain myself, be blameless, and live in comfort.
“Properly considering the lodging, I use it: simply to ward off cold, to ward off heat, to ward off the touch of flies, mosquitoes, wind, sun and reptiles; simply for protection from the inclemencies of weather and for the enjoyment of seclusion.

“Properly considering medicinal requisites for curing the sick, I use them: simply to ward off any pains of illness that have arisen and for the maximum freedom from disease.”

[OP pp.46—47; (Pali: M. I, 10; A. III, 387)]

Clothing, food, shelter and medicine are necessary whether one is a lay person or a bhikkhu. The bhikkhu, however, should take a completely balanced stance towards these fundamentals. Advertising and the latest fashion should not draw him, for he should be solely concerned with simplicity and lack of attachment towards things.[57] It seems that the original requisites were ‘basics’ that wandering bhikkhus could conveniently carry around, for example, an alms bowl, three robes, a sitting cloth, a needle-case, and a waist band. However, extra allowances were gradually given as the need arose, for instance, a water filter, a razor and its sheath, the stone and strop for sharpening it and then articles such as an umbrella and sandals. Later the commentaries allowed other similar items.
Does a Bhikkhu Beg?

The Buddha made it clear that bhikkhus should avoid begging if possible. (In times of great need a bhikkhu is allowed to ask for his basic requisites, for example, if his robes are stolen he may ask any lay person for one replacement robe.) He gave this story about ‘begging’:

A bhikkhu came to the Lord Buddha and complained about a great flock of noisy birds that came to roost at night in the forest surrounding his abode. The Buddha suggested that if he wanted them to go away he should go, many times throughout the night, and beg a feather from each bird. The birds, thinking, ‘that monk wants a feather, and another, and another…’, left the forest and never returned. The Buddha then explained that begging and hinting were unpleasant even to common animals, how much more so to human beings.

A bhikkhu who is constantly begging for things displays his greedy state of mind. No one likes to see this, and lay supporters may start by criticizing him and then turn to blaming his Community or even the Buddha’s Teaching. The Buddha, therefore, set down many rules to guide the bhikkhus about what is proper conduct.
How to Help a Bhikkhu—Invitation

Normally a bhikkhu will not ask for things. Instead, he will wait for something to be offered. This is exemplified in the alms round where the bhikkhu makes no request, does not even look at people, although he may quietly wait to see if an offering is to be made before moving on. One way that lay people enable a bhikkhu to ask them for help is by making an invitation or pavāraṇā.[58]

The Buddha allowed a bhikkhu to accept pavāraṇā or ‘invitation’. Such an invitation is made when lay people decide to commit themselves to supplying medicines if a particular bhikkhu should ever become ill, or it can be a broader offer of help. (Although a sick monk is allowed to ask anyone for medicine, asking somebody who has already invited him with a pavāraṇā invitation is obviously preferable.) Therefore if lay people meet a bhikkhu who seems worthy of help and support, they may make such an invitation. Quite a number of the rules[59] deal with what and how much may be asked for when a donor makes this formal invitation.

An invitation can therefore be quite specific about what is being offered and how long that invitation will last. (Obviously, if circumstances change or the request is unreasonable, the donor has no obligations—and a conscientious bhikkhu is always sensitive about this.)

A clear invitation[60] will also help prevent misunderstandings. For instance, the bhikkhu will know exactly what has been offered and so will not ask for more than that; and the lay person will not be overwhelmed by extravagant requests.

The original circumstances of the forty-seventh Confession Offence were as follows:

A lay supporter possessed much ‘medicinal ghee’ so he invited the monks to make use of it during the following four months. Much of the medicine was still left, so he extended his invitation for another four months and then extended it for life. The Buddha allowed this. However, that same lay donor had once criticized the ‘group-of-six’ monks because of their previous improper conduct so they decided to take their revenge by asking him for an impossibly large amount of medicine (ghee) and then criticized him when he could not immediately produce what he had promised. This rule was set down:

“A bhikkhu who is not ill may accept (make use of) a four-month invitation [pavāraṇā] to ask for requisites. If he should accept (make use of) it for longer than that—unless the invitation is renewed or is permanent—it is [an offence of Confession.]”  (Pāc. 47; BMC p.393)
When the invitation is more vague—for example, a lay person may just say, “If you need anything, Bhante, let me know”—the bhikkhu should not exceed the spirit of the invitation. In fact some communities consider that an invitation in which the lay person does not mention any time limit is valid only for four months and that taking up the invitation beyond that time is an offence.

A bhikkhu is always allowed to ask for requisites from his relatives without having formal invitation first. (Whether they actually supply anything is, of course, up to them.) ‘Relatives’ are considered to be those with whom the bhikkhu has common ancestors back through seven generations, on both the mother’s and father’s side. Here ‘in-laws’ are not counted as relatives.

> “Thus all descendants of one’s great-great-great-great-great-great-great-great-great-grandfather are counted as one’s relatives … [although] a bhikkhu at present would be well-advised to regard as his relatives only those blood-relations with whom ties of kinship are actually felt.”

(BMC p.183)
The ideal possessions of the bhikkhu are just his basic requisites: three main robes (described in the following section); alms bowl; waistband; needle and thread; razor and water filter.

The alms bowl can be made from clay or iron but must be properly fired to harden it (if clay) and rustproof it (if iron). Three bowl-sizes are mentioned: small, medium and large. There are also several rules about begging for a new bowl before one’s old one is worn out, which entails forfeiture of the wrongly acquired bowl. (Nis. Pāc. 22; 23)

The waistband became necessary when a monk’s ‘skirt-robe’ fell down while he was in a village. The needle and thread are needed for patching and repairing the robes—and many teachers instruct that it is a wrong-doing for a monk not to repair them the same day. While the razor became necessary when:
“At one time, bhikkhus’ hair was long. The Buddha asked the bhikkhus:

“Bhikkhus, are the bhikkhus able to cut one another’s hair?”

“When they answered in the affirmative, he allowed a razor, whetstone, razor-case, felt wrapping and barbers’ equipment …”

“Lay people criticized the group of six bhikkhus for wearing long hair. The Buddha made this a Wrong-doing, allowing only two finger-breadths in length or two months growth, whichever came first … Hair and beards should not be styled, combed or smoothed, or grey hairs plucked out—all considered to be ‘like pleasure-enjoying householders’.” (HS ch.12)

The water filter is needed to avoid killing small creatures in drinking water. (See also Killing.)

However, most bhikkhus will have more than this—ranging from everyday items like soap and toothpaste, candles and matches, pen and books, a watch or clock, a flashlight or torch, to more sophisticated things appropriate to their environment. The principle is that such things should not be luxurious or expensive.[63] Anything that is given to him (that is allowable) is his to keep, and he is allowed to give his things Disposal or appropriation of anything owned by the Community, or belonging to the monastery, is strictly controlled and is covered by the rules that follow in the next section.

After a bhikkhu dies, his possessions will normally revert to the Sangha:

“Articles belonging to bhikkhus and novices who have died have the Sangha [Community] as owner, that is they are the inheritance of the Sangha.”

(EV,II,p.151)
Wrongly Receiving Gifts

When a bhikkhu receives a general (i.e., non-personal) gift, there are two rules to guard against his misdirecting it. (When a bhikkhu actually steals something it is an offence of Defeat. See Stealing.)

The first of these rules arose when a guild was preparing to make an offering of a meal and some cloth to the whole Community whereupon the ‘group-of-six’ bhikkhus arrived and pressured the donors into giving the cloth to them instead:

“Should any bhikkhu knowingly divert to himself gains that had been intended for a Community, it is [an offence of Confession with Forfeiture.]”

(Gnis. Pāc. 30; BMC p.256)

“Gains’ here refers to robes, alms food, abodes and medicines … and other allowable things. [They are] gifts dedicated as offerings to the Sangha but not yet offered. A bhikkhu diverts such gifts to himself by asking directly for them or by roundabout speech so that the donor will give them to him.”

(Gnis. Pāc. 30; Pāt. 1969 Ed.; p159)
In the above rule the wrongly obtained ‘gift’ must be forfeited to another bhikkhu(s). (However, money is a special case. See Valuables and Money, page 145.) The following rule complements the one above but is an offence of Confession:

“Persuading a donor to give to another individual a gift that he or she had planned to give to a Community—when one knows that it was intended for the Community—is [an offence of Confession.]”

(Pāc. 82; BMC p.461)
What can be Offered?

As has been mentioned above, the Buddha said that there were four necessities for life—Clothing, Food or ‘edibles’, Shelter or lodging and Medicine—so we will use those divisions in the following sections.

The case of the offering of money and wealth is covered below. (See Bhikkhus and Wealth, p. 147) There is also a Sutta where it is mentioned that bhikkhus do not accept gifts of gardens, paddy-fields and other sorts of land, or draught animals, and other sorts of animals, etc. (EV,II, p.150)
Clothing: The Robe

The basic clothing that the Buddha originally suggested for a bhikkhu was made from discarded cloth (‘rags’) sewn together and dyed. After sewing the pieces together, they were just large rectangular pieces of cloth worn wraparound style.
In the beginning,[66] it seems that there were two robes: a sarong skirt-like robe (antaravāsaka) tied with a belt, and a robe to cover the upper part of the body (uttarāsaṅga). When the cold weather required more protection, the Buddha allowed a third robe, which was a double-thickness outer robe (saṅghāṭi).

Some rules limit the size of robes because cloth in India in those days was expensive due to the simple methods of spinning and weaving. Also, so that the robe would not be worth stealing, the cloth always had to be cut into panels that were then sewn together based on the design of paddy fields seen from a mountain. (See graphic above.)[67]

After having received an offering of white cloth and having properly cut and sewn the panels together, the bhikkhu must dye it to produce the ‘yellow robe’. Traditionally, vegetable dyes were used in this process. Different plants and woods when boiled up will produce slightly different shades of dye colour—the Pāli text calls the standard colour kāsāya or kāsāva, translated as ‘dun-coloured dye-water’[68]—so there is some variety. When bhikkhus from different communities come together, their different shades of ‘yellow’-dyed robes makes this very noticeable. (The destruction of the South East Asian forests has led to chemical dyes being used more frequently, so that cloth offered nowadays is often pre-dyed and brighter in colour.)

Slightly varied styles of wearing the traditional set of three robes have developed over the years in different countries. [69] But basically, the rectangular shaped robe is put around the body and the two vertical edges are folded or rolled together. Then either it is tucked in and secured with a belt (for the skirt-robe) or, for the larger outer robes, the edge is ‘thrown’ or flicked over the left shoulder and pinched under the left arm so that it will not slip off. There are various techniques for this. (It needs some practice!)

In the Lord Buddha’s time, it was a sign of respect to bare one’s right shoulder. Therefore when in the monastery the bhikkhu will normally wear his outer robe with the right shoulder visible. On leaving the monastery for inhabited areas he must cover both shoulders. [70]

In addition to this required set of the ‘triple robe’, which every bhikkhu must have and look after, there are extra cloths that can be used occasionally. [71]
The Robe Offering Time

The month following the three months of the Rains Retreat—sometime in the October–November period—is the traditional Kaṭhina time for renewing bhikkhus’ robes. In ancient times, this was when bhikkhus would help one another in hand-sewing cloth into new robes—using the special wooden kaṭhina frame.

This is the time when lay supporters often make a special offering of cloth and other requisites to all the monks at a particular monastery. A sewing machine is normally used but all the monks still try to help in the marking out, cutting, sewing, or dying process. The cloth has to be offered, sewn and dyed, so that it is a finished robe and ready to wear within the same day. (Often the robe nowadays is already sewn and pre-dyed.) If this procedure is carried through correctly, the bhikkhus are then entitled to special allowances for the next few months.

The Kaṭhina Ceremony is optional (unlike some other observances that are mandatory) and requires a quorum of five (eligible) bhikkhus. It has, however, generally become an important festival and almsgiving occasion.
As has been mentioned above, the Buddha said that there were four necessities of life: clothing, food, shelter and medicine.

The Buddha suggested that the basic source of food for bhikkhus was that received on the morning alms round (piṇḍapāta). This daily dependence on alms food reminds both the bhikkhus and the lay devotees of their interdependence and prevents the bhikkhu from becoming too isolated from the lay community. He ‘meets’ them every day and eats the food that they share with him. Several important rules are concerned with this as well as a major section of the Sekhiya Training rules. (See below; see also story about Ven. Assaji.)

An alms round is not considered begging, for the bhikkhu does not solicit anything but is ready mindfully to receive any alms that lay people may wish to give. Although alms food may sometimes be meagre, the bhikkhu is always expected to be grateful for whatever he is given. It is surprising how particular we can be about what food we like to eat; and what complications that can cause. This is reflected in the way rules concerning ‘edibles’ are arranged, which may seem very complex especially when the bhikkhu’s life is supposed to be so simple. It should be borne in mind that the rules often deal with extraordinary circumstances and try to prevent them from becoming the norm.
Begging for Food

When the ‘group-of-six’ monks in the Buddha’s time solicited ‘special foods’ and ate them themselves, the lay people criticized this saying, “Who isn’t fond of good food and sweets?” The Buddha therefore laid down this rule:

“There are these finer staple foods, i.e. ghee, fresh butter, oil, honey, sugar/molasses, fish, meat, fresh milk, and curds. Should any bhikkhu who is not ill, having asked for finer staple foods such as these for his own sake, then eat them, it is [an offence of Confession.]” (Pàc. 39; BMC p.367)

“There are sumptuous foods, namely foods mixed with ghee, butter, oil, honey, molasses, fish, meat, milk and curd; and a monk who, though not sick, asks for such sumptuous foods for himself and eats them commits [an offence of Confession.]” (Pàc. 39; BBC p.127)

The ancient commentators suggest that these ‘finer foods’ are actually made when one mixes rice, for example, with butter or fish, etc.
An exception is made for a monk who is ill, and a bhikkhu can ask for special food for the sake of a fellow monk who is sick. (He is always allowed to ask a relative or someone who has offered a Pavāranā Invitation.)
Receiving and Eating Food

A whole section[75] of the seventy-five Sekhiya Training guidelines is concerned with how a bhikkhu receives and eats his alms food. Although ‘table manners’ may differ from country to country, and from age to age, these Sekhiya rules still largely conform to what is considered good manners:

“I will receive alms food appreciatively.”[76] (Sekhiya 27)

“When receiving alms food, I will focus my attention on the bowl.” (Sekhiya 28)

This explains why the bhikkhu may not look at the donor when accepting food—he is concentrating on properly receiving it.

“I will receive/eat (bean-)curries in the right proportion to the rice.” (Sekhiya 29/34)

It is suggested that this was laid down so that bhikkhus on alms round would not pass by people offering plain rice in favour of better quality food. (See EV, I, p. 211)
“I will receive alms food only until it reaches the rim of the bowl.”
(Sekhiya 30)

However, on festival or special occasions the bhikkhu’s bowl may be emptied so that everyone who wants to join in offering has the opportunity. [77]

“I will eat alms food attentively.”
(Sekhiya 31)

“When eating alms food, I will look only into the bowl.” (Sekhiya 32)

This is also why the bhikkhu should not be expected to talk while he is eating, for this will distract his attention.

“I will not cover up curries or other food with rice out of a desire to get more.”
(Sekhiya 36)

If donors think that the monk has only plain rice in his bowl, they may give him some ‘better’ food.

“When I am not sick, I will not ask for curries or rice for my own benefit.”
(Sekhiya 37)

Other Sekhiya rules seem aimed at bhikkhus eating from their bowl using their fingers in the traditional way of India: [78]

“I will not make up an overlarge mouthful of food; nor open my mouth until the portion of food has been brought to it; nor put my fingers into my mouth; nor speak with my mouth full.

“I will not eat: stuffing out my cheeks; shaking my hand about; scattering grains of rice about; putting out my tongue; making a champing sound; (or drink) making a sucking sound; licking my hands; scraping the bowl; licking my lips. I will not take hold of a vessel of water with my hand soiled with food.”

(Sekhiya [75] Section)
Meal Time

In the West the first meal of the day is ‘break-fast’. For the bhikkhu this is literally true, for he will not have taken any food since the previous morning. Food intake is limited to the hours between dawn and noon. The practice of not eating in the afternoon is a very old tradition mentioned in the earliest Suttas.[79] It is also included in the Ten Precepts of the novice (sāmañera) and dasasīla mata nun; and the Eight Precepts of the lay devotee.[4]

‘Food’ here refers to things like cooked grains; sweets made from flour, beans, etc.; fish; meat; fresh milk and sour milk; … fruits, tubers and all ‘main course’ foods. (See EV,II, pp.131—133)

When these staple foods go beyond their time limit (i.e. after noon) a bhikkhu will incur an offence if he consumes them. The original story shows the complications that can arise from leaving the monastery at the wrong time:

The ‘group-of-seventeen’ bhikkhus—another set of frequent misdoers—went out one afternoon to enjoy themselves at a festival outside the city. When lay people saw them they gave them a meal and food to take back to the monastery. The Buddha therefore laid down this rule:

“Should any bhikkhu chew or consume staple or non-staple food at the wrong time, it is [an offence of Confession.]”

(Pāc. 37; BMC p.362)

This ‘wrong time’ is defined to be from noon until dawn the following day.[80] A bhikkhu is still at fault even if he genuinely miscalculates the time or mistakes an item of ‘food’ for a ‘medicine’. Therefore if donors are preparing food for a bhikkhu they should be careful that they are not late in offering it so that the meal can be finished before noon. It is also noteworthy that an ill bhikkhu has no exemption from this rule so he likewise should not take food in the afternoon.[81]
The Four Sorts of ‘Edibles’

Any nutriment that a bhikkhu puts into his mouth is classified in four groups, which specify the time limits during which he can consume or store them:

(i) Food—Limited from Dawn to Noon (Yāvakālika)
(ii) Fruit juices—Limited to One Day (Yāmakālika)
(iii) Medicinal-tonics—Limited to Seven Days (Sattāhakālika)
(iv) Other Medicines—For All One’s Life (Yāvajīvika)
Mixing Edibles

When different kinds of ‘edibles’ are mixed, their category will usually change to that with the shortest life span. For example, ginger can be used as a herbal ‘lifetime’ medicine for stomach ailments. However, grated-ginger that has been used for food preparation is classed as ‘food’ and therefore should not be kept overnight or used as a medicine. Likewise, if honey is used as a solvent or base for herbal medicines, because the honey has a seven-day limit, that lifetime (herbal) medicine becomes a seven-day medicine.

This is another reason that bhikkhus may be careful about the ingredients of medicines that are offered. When offering ‘medicines’ the donor should try to be aware of what the bhikkhu considers allowable and what will cause him to fall into offence.
We have already mentioned the bhikkhu’s alms round and his dependence on receiving food from lay supporters. But how is the gift made and how is it properly received? This is accomplished in quite a formal way yet it can still be confusing to lay devotees for different monks receive an offering in slightly different ways.

The rule that explains about formally having to make an offering to bhikkhus arose when a certain bhikkhu lived in a charnel ground, wearing robes made from rags collected from there. He also subsisted on the food left for ‘departed spirits’ by relatives of the dead person. The lay people criticized him, wrongly suspecting he might also be feeding on human flesh so the Buddha set down this rule:

“Should a bhikkhu take into his mouth an edible that has not been given—except for water and tooth-cleaning sticks—it is [an offence of Confession.]”

(Pāc. 40; BMC p.370)

“A monk who puts in his mouth, any nutriment, which has not been proffered to him, commits [a Confession offence.]”

(Pāc. 40; BBC p.127)
Present day practice regarding this rule (Pāc. 40 above) varies so much because of the intricacy of interpretation. However, usually, anything[83] that goes into the mouth—food or ‘medicines’—should be properly given. That means it should be:

(a) given by means of the body, (e.g. given by hand), or by something attached to the body, (e.g. a spoon),[84] or by throwing, (e.g. tossing a lump of sticky rice into the bowl).

(b) given so that the donor and the bhikkhu are (literally) within arms reach (1.25 metres) of each other.

(c) received by means of the body, (e.g. received in the hand) or by something attached to the body, (e.g. the monk’s bowl or, in Thailand, the monk’s receiving cloth).[85]

The Commentaries then further expand the details of the correct way that food should be given:

(d) the offered food should not be so heavy that an average size man cannot lift it.
In many communities this has led to the food having to be literally lifted into the monk’s hands or onto his receiving cloth. The Commentary allows it to be slid along the floor or table into the monk’s hands.

(e) the donor must actually move the food (on a tray, for example) towards the bhikkhu, (i.e., the bhikkhu does not reach out for it first).

This has also been understood as meaning that the donor makes a gesture (of respect) when making the offering. (This has to be balanced with the Sekhiya Training rule where it is the monk who should “be appreciative and attentive when receiving food”. ) However, in the West, this gesture of respect may be taken according to local custom. (See BMC p.375)

In some monasteries food is not considered properly given if the lay person wears shoes or sandals when offering to a barefooted bhikkhu. Also, in some communities, when properly offered food is touched again or moved by lay people, even accidentally, it has to be re-offered.

The major point to remember is that in offering food (or anything edible) to a monk there is a formal way of doing so—otherwise the bhikkhu may not be able to eat it. Once one gets used to this interaction with the monk, it becomes quite a meaningful gesture.
Storing Food

AFTER FORMALLY RECEIVING FOOD, a bhikkhu is not allowed to store it away for another day. This is another rule that supports the mendicant ideal and the interdependence of monk and lay person, and stops the bhikkhu from becoming attached to his favourite tastes.

The case originally arose when a monk coming back from alms round would eat some food and then dry any remaining rice in the sun to store for the next days’ meals. In this way he did not have to go on an alms round every day. It can be summarized:

“Eating food that a bhikkhu—one self or another—formally received on a previous day is [an offence of Confession.]” (Pāc. 38; BMC p.367)

After the daily meal—often the monks of the community will gather to share this—all that day’s excess food may be distributed among whoever is present so that nothing is wasted or left over. [86]

Lay people themselves are also allowed to deposit food in the properly approved storeroom so that it can be offered to the monks on another day. If the lay people store it there, the monks will not be counted as having formally received it. (So the formal act of offering also serves the purpose of determining whether food can be stored or not.)
Meal Invitations

It is traditional for lay devotees on special occasions to invite bhikkhus to go and have a meal at their house. This is normally a very straightforward matter and the bhikkhu(s) will explain if they are able to go on that particular day. To show some aspects from the Buddha’s time, there are these rules:

†The origin of this first rule displays the care that a bhikkhu should take when accepting such an invitation.

A poor workman was inspired to invite the Buddha and all the bhikkhus of the town for a meal, and he insisted they still come even when the Buddha cautioned him about the large number of monks involved. Some bhikkhus assumed that he would not be able to afford very much food so they first went on an alms round and ate beforehand. Therefore when they came to go for the poor man’s meal they could not eat very much—even though there was in fact plenty of food because other people had helped to support the poor workman’s faith by sending round donations of food. The poor workman became upset saying, “How can you eat elsewhere … am I not competent to give sufficient?”
The rule is summarized:

“Eating a meal before going to another meal to which one was invited, or accepting an invitation to one meal and eating elsewhere instead, is [an offence of Confession] except when one is ill or at the time of giving cloth or making robes.”

(Pāc. 33; BMC p.352)

Should a bhikkhu seem somewhat reluctant to accept your invitation, be aware that he may not be able to change his acceptance of a previous invitation. There is, however, an allowance for the bhikkhu to ‘share’ or transfer his invitation to another bhikkhu or novice so that he can accept a new one. Even so, it is considered good manners first to contact the original donors about this.

Another, rather obscure, rule about meal invitations originated like this:
Ven. Devadatta attempted to take over the Saṅgha and then tried to kill the Buddha. The Saṅgha informed the local inhabitants about Ven. Devadatta’s behaviour so that it would not reflect on the Saṅgha as a whole. Ven. Devadatta then found alms so difficult to obtain that he solicited alms—“having asked and asked”—(for all his group) and the lay people criticized them for such unseemly conduct.

It seems that this rather enigmatic rule may forbid bhikkhus from accepting an invitation to a ‘group meal’ of four or more specified monks at a donor’s house when the whole local community is not invited—as would have been more normal in the Buddha’s days. This would then have avoided the forming of cliques inside a community. (See BMC p.342—348)

The Buddha therefore laid down that:

“Eating a meal to which four or more individual bhikkhus have been specifically invited—except on special occasions—is [an offence of Confession.]” (Summary Pāc. 32; BMC p.348)

Another interpretation of this obscure rule requires that bhikkhus

“… do not accept the invitations of those who mention the names of the foods to be offered. The inviter who understands this, makes invitation just in this way: “I invite you to receive alms-food”, or, “I invite you to take breakfast … or lunch”. By speaking in this way it is possible for bhikkhus to accept.” (Pāt. 1969 Ed.; p161)

If the community lives by this second interpretation, one should be careful when inviting bhikkhus for a meal not to mention the specific food that one intends to offer.
Meat-eating

In Western countries vegetarianism has recently increased in popularity and this has led to some questioning about bhikkhus and meat-eating. (In less materially developed countries the question is more about ‘what, if anything, is there to eat?’)

The question of monks’ eating meat is an old one that was originally raised by the ‘renegade monk’ Ven. Devadatta. He asked the Buddha to prohibit bhikkhus from eating fish and flesh in what seems was a ploy to take over the leadership of the Sangha. (The ‘stricter ascetic’ tactic.) The Buddha had already made a strict rule for both bhikkhus and lay people about not taking life, (see page 71) so He did not agree to Ven. Devadatta’s new formulation.

The Buddha did allow bhikkhus to eat meat and fish[88] except under the following circumstances:

If a bhikkhu sees, hears or suspects that it has been killed for him, he may not eat it.[89] (M.I,369)

If a bhikkhu is given meat on alms round and he has no knowledge about how the animal died[90] he has to ‘receive it with attentiveness’. (See the Sekhiya Trainings.)
He should be grateful and recollect that the food he is given is what enables him to continue to live the bhikkhu life, and that as a mendicant he is not in a position to choose what he gets. If he later comes to know the family and they ask him about Dhamma, he will be able to explain the precept about not killing. This may cause them to reflect on their attitude to meat eating.

An individual lay person can choose whether to be a vegetarian. Problems usually arise only when vegetarians want to impose their choice on others, and as meal times are normally a family or shared affair this can create tensions and misunderstandings. This, as with most of Dhamma, has to be an individual choice without a judgemental attitude to others.

An individual bhikkhu who lives on alms food cannot make such choices. Often the donors are unknown—perhaps not even Buddhist, or just starting to find out about Dhamma—and to refuse their generosity may so offend them that they never have anything to do with Dhamma again.

Finally it comes down to the lay people who go to the market to buy food to give to the bhikkhus. If they are vegetarian themselves or like to give vegetarian food, then the bhikkhu should receive that food with ‘appreciation’—especially if it means that fewer animals are being slaughtered. Nevertheless, it should not become a political issue where other people are attacked for their behaviour.
Offering Fruit: Kappiya

At the time of the Buddha, some lay people complained that the monks had destroyed the ‘life’ in seeds. (See also about ‘one-facultied life’ on page 73.) Destroying seeds therefore became a minor (dukkaṭa) offence, and the monk had to ask the lay people whether they found it ‘allowable’ for him to eat certain fruits.

Fruits with seeds that can germinate and roots (bulbs, tubers) that can be planted again should be made ‘allowable’ or kappiya for bhikkhus. An unordained person can do this by touching it with fire, by drawing a knife over it, or by marking it with a finger nail.

In some monasteries, there is a ceremony—briefly mentioned in the actual Vinaya but given in detail in the Commentaries—where the lay person offering the fruit, makes it ‘allowable’ for the bhikkhu to eat. For example, this may be done with an orange by slightly cutting the peel when the monk says, “Kappiyam karoḥi” (“Make this allowable”) and answering him with, “Kappiyam Bhante” (“It is allowable, Ven. Sir.”). If there are many oranges, and if they are all together and touching, making one fruit allowable makes them all allowable. (In other communities, if the donor offers fruit already ‘damaged’ (e.g. peeled or cut) it is considered already allowable.)

There is no need for this ceremony with seedless fruit, with fruit if the seeds are unripe so that they cannot regenerate, and with fruit offered already cut with all the seeds removed. Also, if the bhikkhu carefully eats certain sorts of fruits—for instance, mangoes, jackfruit, plums, peaches, prunes, etc.—without damaging the seed, stone, pit or pips, there is no offence.
Food in the Wilderness

The following rule again shows the interdependence and care which must be cultivated between bhikkhus and those who support them.

In the Buddha’s time some ladies were ambushed and raped on their way to give food to bhikkhus living in a dangerous jungle area. Their family criticized the bhikkhus for not warning them of the hazards. If lay people intend to give food to a bhikkhu(s) in such a danger zone then they must announce that to the bhikkhu(s) beforehand so that the bhikkhu(s) has a chance to warn them or reduce the threat. The rule can be summarized:

“Eating an unannounced gift of staple or non-staple food, after accepting it in a dangerous wilderness abode when one is not ill is [an offence of Acknowledgement.]” (Pātidesaniya 4; BMC p.488)
Fruit juices

The above sections have dealt with food (yāvakālika) but as has been already mentioned fruit juices are considered under a different category. (See above, The Four Sorts of Edibles.) Although bhikkhus should not eat fruit—which is food—after midday, they can drink the ‘fruit juice’ any time throughout the day. However, they cannot store fruit juice beyond that single day. This is called yāmakālika and is a juice-drink made from crushed fruit, which is then carefully strained of any pulp or particles.[92] (The Vinayamukha (EV) Commentary suggests that it could not be stored beyond the next dawn because sugar mixed in with the fruit juice might lead to slight fermentation.)

When offering fruit juice it is important that it is well strained so that no pulp or fruit particles remain, for the fruit itself counts as food and so cannot be consumed in the afternoon. Some places in Thailand will strain the juice in a cloth filter seven times to make sure, but the main point is that the filter is fine enough.[93]

“Juice drinks include the freshly squeezed juice of sugar cane, lotus root, all fruits except grain, all leaves except cooked vegetables, and all flowers except the [bassia latifolia] (Mahāvagga.VI.35.6). According to the Commentary, the juice must be strained, and may be warmed by sunlight but not heated over a fire.”

(BMC p.339)

Some communities will not accept fruit juice made from ‘large fruits’:

“In discussing the Great Standards, the Commentary says that grain is a “great fruit,” and thus the juice of any one of nine large fruits—palmyra fruit, coconut, jack fruit, breadfruit, bottle gourd, white gourd, musk melon, water melon, and squash—would fall under the same class as the juice of grain ... From this judgment, many Communities [in Thailand] infer that the juice of any large fruit, such as pineapple or grapefruit, would also be classed as a non-staple food [and therefore could not be consumed in the afternoon.]”

(BMC p.339)
Medicines or Tonics

We have dealt above with food and fruit juice. There is now the category of ‘tonic-medicines’ (sattāhakālika). These can be consumed at any time but cannot be stored longer than seven days (after they are offered).

These tonic-medicines were originally regulated when Venerable Pilindavaccha’s great feats of psychic power made him so famous that he received many offerings of the five ‘tonics’. Even though he distributed these among other monks there was so much that the excess had to be stored away and their dwellings were overrun by rats. Visiting lay people criticized the monks for “storing up goods in abundance like a king”. The Buddha therefore set down this rule:

“Keeping any of the five tonics—ghee, fresh butter, oil, honey, or sugar/molasses—for more than seven days is [an offence of Confession with Forfeiture.]” (Summarized Nis. Pāc. 23; BMC p.242)
There are various translations and interpretations about these ‘tonic-medicines’—according to different Communities and different countries. Some places consider only liquids allowable while a few communities will drink only plain water in the afternoon. Some communities will not accept re-offered tonic-medicines (after the seven days period is over), some will under certain circumstances. Therefore lay devotees need to enquire about the practice of their local Community and follow that way.[94]

Some contemporary observations:

“The five medicines—ghee, navanītam, oil, honey, and sugar—were allowed by the Buddha to be consumed by ‘sick’ monks at any time of the day or night. According to the Mahāvagga, these five were ‘agreed upon as medicines and, although they served as nutriment for people, were not considered as substantial food’. The degree of infirmity required before a monk is allowed to consume these [tonic-]medicines is a controversial point. …It seems that feeling rundown or feeling tired after physical exertion would be sufficient cause to be able to make use of the Five Medicines.”

(AB)
“The main effectiveness of these medicines seems to be in their nutritional value. They do not have medicinal value as commonly understood today, for example, relieving pain or as an antiseptic. However, as nutriment they would help to maintain bodily strength and assist in recuperation while, since they are so rich, would not be a substitute for normal food.” (HS ch.10)

Also, if the tonic-medicine is mixed with a tiny amount of food then it would be acceptable according to this allowance:

“…if sugar has a little flour mixed with it simply to make it firmer—as sometimes happens in sugar cubes and blocks of palm sugar—it is still classed as a tonic as it is still regarded simply as ‘sugar’.” (BMC p.238–9)

If the flour is for more food-like reasons then it would be counted as food. See also Mixing Edibles above.
Lifetime Medicines

THE FOURTH CATEGORY OF EDIBLES (see The Four Sorts of Edibles) is that of Lifetime Medicines (yāvajīvika), which includes what we generally think of as medicines.

The basic principle set down by the Buddha about all medicines is in this reflection:

“Properly considering medicinal requisites for curing the sick, I use them: simply to ward off any pains of illness that have arisen, and for the maximum freedom from disease.”

[OP p. 47; (Pāli: M. I, 10; A. III, 387)]

In the beginning, the basic (herbal) medicines allowed by the Buddha were those pickled in urine. Later, nearly all other types came to be considered allowable.[95](See the separate allowance above for ‘tonic-medicines’.)

Medicines that may be consumed without time limitation are called yāvajīvika. The Texts mention different sorts of herbal medicines such as: plant roots, e.g. ginger, turmeric, sweet flag, etc.; decoctions, such as of the neem or nux-vomica; tree-leaves, such as neem-leaves, tulsi or holy basil; fruits, such as long peppers, myrobalan, wormwood; resins, such as asafoetida; salts, such as sea-salt, rock salt, etc. Any other medicine or herbs similar to these that is not reckoned to be food is included under this ‘lifetime’ category. [96]

Modern western medicines are usually included—using the Great Standards—under this category and therefore can be taken at any time of the day and kept as long as necessary.
Drugs and Alcohol

FINALLY, WE TURN TO those ‘substances of abuse’ that are entirely prohibited. The fifth of the Five Precepts[4] for all Buddhists is restraint from drinking alcohol and similar substances that destroy mindfulness, and are thereby a frequent cause of unskilful actions and speech. The equivalent rule for bhikkhus is the fifty-first Confession Rule:

“The drinking of alcohol or fermented liquors is [an offence of Confession.]”

(Πάc. 51; BMC p.402)

The origin-story concerns Ven. Sāgata who conquered a fierce nāga—a type of serpent with magical powers—by his meditation-developed psychic powers. The townspeople heard about this feat and wanted to make some sort of offering to him, upon which the ‘group-of-six’ bhikkhus impudently suggested that they all should give him alcohol. When he arrived on his almsround every household offered alcohol and he finally collapsed, drunk, at the town gate and had to be carried back to the monastery. He was laid down in a stupor with his head towards the Buddha but in his drunkenness he turned around so that his feet pointed at the Buddha.[97] The Buddha called attention to his changed behaviour, remarking that he certainly could not oppose “even a salamander” in such a state.

The Buddha also said:

“Bhikkhus, … there are these four stains because of which samanas and brahmins glow not, shine not, blaze not. What are these four? Drinking alcoholic beverages … indulging in sexual intercourse … accepting gold and money … obtaining requisites through a wrong mode of livelihood.” (A.II,53)

The Four Great Standards may be further used to argue that using narcotics—which also destroy mindfulness and lead to heedlessness—would also be an offence of Confession. Then there is the general principle of respecting the ‘law of the land’ (when it accords with Dhamma) so such illegal drugs would be disallowed anyway.
Stealing

Stealing is universally condemned and is prohibited by one of the basic Five Precepts[4] of any Buddhist. For the bhikkhu it is covered by the heaviest penalty of Defeat, being the second Pārājika.

The rule was originally set down in the Lord Buddha’s time when Venerable Dhaniya, by deception, carried off some of the king’s timber to make himself a hut:

“A bhikkhu who takes something which the owner has not given to him and which has a value of five māsaka [‘coins’] (or more) [is Defeated]”

(Summary Pār. 2; Nv p.5)
Or:

“The theft of anything worth 1/24 ounce troy of gold or more is [an offence of Defeat.]”    (Summary Pâr. 2; BMC p.65)

‘Defeat’ means the absolute termination of the perpetrator’s bhikkhu-life so his stealing should be more than a petty theft.[100] Therefore for this to be an offence, the value of the stolen object must be such that, as it states in the original: “kings …
would banish him, saying … ‘You are a thief!’”. In modern America this is probably equivalent to ‘grand larceny’. (Petty theft is a grave offence (thullaccaya) or one of wrong-doing.)

The bhikkhu must have an intention to steal for this to be an offence. If an apparent theft happens without his knowledge or connivance, or by mistake without any design on his part, it is no offence. However, fraud, breach of trust, embezzlement, tax evasion, smuggling, breach of copyright, etc., would be included under this rule.[101]
Bhikkhus and Wealth

There are many other important rules covering how bhikkhus deal with wealth and money.[102] (It is also the tenth of the Ten Precepts for a novice (śāmaṇera) or dasasīla mata nun.[4]) These came to be set down because donations coming from a lay devotee’s faith in Dhamma might, on mis-occasion, lead to the corrupting of the bhikkhu-life. Although these rules might seem relatively straightforward, there are various interpretations and ways of actual practice. And the practice often does not coincide with the theory. Yet it certainly remains a very important aspect of Vinaya, guarding against forgetfulness of the real way to happiness:

“Bhikkhus, in abandoning the use of money, make real their abandonment of worldly pursuits and show others by example that the struggle for wealth is not the true way to find happiness.” (BMC p.215)
Money

The rule about a bhikkhu not accepting money came to be made when Ven. Upananda went to visit his regular supporters on alms round. The meat that had been set aside for him that morning had instead been given to the family’s hungry son. The householder wished to give something else to make up for it and asked what he could offer to the value of a kahāpana coin. Ven. Upananda inquired if he was making a gift of a kahāpana coin to him, and then took the money away. Lay people were disgusted with this, saying, “Just as we lay people accept money, so too do these Buddhist monks!”.

This Rule has been variously translated:

“Should any bhikkhu take gold and silver, or have it taken, or consent to its being deposited (near him), it is to be forfeited and confessed.”

(Nis. Pāc. 18; BMC p.214)

“Should any bhikkhu pick up, or cause to be picked up or consent to the deposit of gold or silver, this entails Confession with Forfeiture.”

(Nis. Pāc. 18; Pāt. 1966 Ed. p.42)
“A monk, who accepts gold or money or gets another to accept for him, or acquiesces in its being put near him, commits [an offence requiring Confession with Forfeiture.]”
(Nis. Pāc. 18; BBC p.116)

“If a bhikkhu himself receives gold and silver (money) or gets someone else to receive it, or if he is glad about money that is being kept for him, it is [an offence of Confession with Forfeiture.]”
(Nis. Pāc. 18; Nv p.11)

Note that there are some subtle differences in the way that the rule is translated, especially in the last example.

According to the Commentary, there is ‘no consent’ if a bhikkhu refuses to accept the money: by word—telling the donor that it is not proper to receive money; by deed—gesturing to that effect; by thought—thinking that this is not proper. There may be a problem in communicating this to the donors without causing them offence and without the bhikkhu falling into offence himself.[103]

Many of the rules concerning money, etc., are those of Confession with Forfeiture (Nissaggiya Pācittiya). This means that the money or articles that are wrongly acquired have to be forfeited. Furthermore, it is specified that they cannot be forfeited to a single monk but must be given up to the Community—who must then follow a strict procedure for disposing of those gains.

In practice, this rule is understood by various bhikkhus in different ways. This ranges from some monks who seek to circumvent the rule completely by saying that “paper-money is just paper” and therefore not ‘gold and silver’ (jātarūpa-rajata) and so falls outside the rule; to the following more strict opinions:

The Pāli term jātarūpa is defined as ‘gold of any sort’ and, while rajata is also ‘silver’ in other contexts, here it is defined as māsaka (coins) of different materials (copper, wood, lac) whatever is used in business, i.e. money.

“At present the term would include coins and paper currency, but not checks, credit cards, bank drafts, or promissory notes, as these—on their own and without further identification of the persons carrying them—do not function as true currency.” (BMC p.215)

“The term jātarūpa-rajata refers firstly to personal adornments (of gold and silver), secondly to ingots, thirdly to rūpiya, which are for buying and selling, referring not only to gold and silver but anything which can be used in this way. All the above-mentioned things are included in this term. The phrase, ‘be glad at the money kept for him’ [as in translation above] suggests that if it is only cittuppāda (the coming into existence of a thought), he would not [fall into an offence,] so it must refer to the action of receiving it and holding the right over it.”

(Pāt. 1969 Ed. p.158)

“For Laypeople: A lay-person should never offer money directly to a bhikkhu … even if it is placed inside an envelope or together with other requisites. They should either deposit the money with the monastery steward, put it in a donation-box or into the monastery bank account. They may then state their invitation to the bhikkhu(s) regarding the kind or amount of requisite(s). In Thailand, for example, knowledgeable lay-people would deposit money with the steward and offer to the bhikkhu(s) an invitation note mentioning the details of the offering.”

(HS ch.14)
Cheques, Credit Cards, etc.

Upon modern conditions things other than cash also have to be considered. What about bhikkhus using cheques or even postage stamps or ‘phone cards’? What is included in the rule and where does one draw the line? Different communities will understand these rules in slightly different ways—although probably all will find ordinary postage stamps acceptable! It seems that although credit cards and cheques do not quite function in the same way as cash and therefore may not break that rule about accepting money (Nis. Pāc. 18), they would still fall under another offence. (See below: Buying and Selling; compare Barter or Trade.) Some modern opinions:

“At present the term ['gold and silver'] would include coins and paper currency, but not checks, credit cards, bank drafts, or promissory notes, as these—on their own and without further identification of the persons carrying them—do not function as true currency.” (BMC p.215)
“Cheques, credit cards and travellers cheques are not the same as money because [they are not] commonly negotiable, something that one can take into almost any shop and, without any further ‘ink-work’ or paperwork, exchange it for whatever one desires. …[therefore] there is no offence for receiving or holding these things. However, using cheques, credit cards and travellers cheques or things similar would come under ‘buying and selling’ and the offences listed under [Confession with Forfeiture] 19 and 20 would be likely to arise.” (AB)

“The offence [Nis. Pāc. 20] is committed when the bhikkhu hands the signed credit card receipt—or has it handed—to the seller…” (BMC p.230)
WHILE MONEY is an important commodity in the world—greed and selfishness are the actual ‘root of evil’—bhikkhus should not be concerned with it. Therefore this again offers an essential role for lay people. The bhikkhu stores no food but receives help from lay people who do; the bhikkhu stores no money but receives support from lay people who do. In fact this relationship is shown in this next allowance from the Buddha’s time when bhikkhus were journeying along a difficult way. Food was difficult to find and He therefore allowed them to seek provisions. He also made another allowance, saying:

“There are people of conviction and confidence, bhikkhus, who place gold and silver in the hand of stewards, saying, ‘Give the master whatever is allowable.’ I allow you, bhikkhus to accept whatever is allowable coming from that. But in no way at all do I say that money is to be accepted or sought for.”

(BMC p.198)
“People who have good faith in bhikkhus may entrust money (lit., silver and gold) into the hand of a [steward] and order him to purchase allowable things for bhikkhus. Bhikkhus may be glad at the allowable things bought by the steward with that money. This is not regarded as being glad at that money. This is called the [Meõóaka Allowance.] Bhikkhus should not request suitable things from the steward in excess of the money deposited with him.”

(EV,II,p.135)
A Bhikkhu’s Steward

This is a rule which explains more about the relationship between the bhikkhu and the steward who is taking care of funds for him.

In the original story, Ven. Upananda’s steward had received some money from a chief minister so that when Ven. Upananda needed a robe he could be supplied with one. Ven. Upananda eventually asked for a robe on the day when the steward had an important meeting that everyone was obliged to attend or be penalized. Ven. Upananda refused to wait and forced the steward to get the robe immediately so that the steward came late to the meeting and suffered a penalty fine. Everyone there agreed that, ‘these monks are impatient and difficult to serve’. Therefore the Buddha set down this rule:

“If someone sends money (valuables) for the purpose of buying a robe for a bhikkhu and he (whoever brings the money) wants to know who is acting as the bhikkhu’s attendant (veyyāvaccakara), and if the bhikkhu wants the robe he should indicate someone connected with the monastery or an upasaka (lay devotee) saying: “This person is the attendant of all the bhikkhus”. When he (who brings the money) has instructed the attendant and told the bhikkhu: “If you want a robe, tell the attendant,” then later that bhikkhu should go and find the attendant, he may tell him: “I need a robe”. If he does not get it, he may ask up to three times in all. If he still does not get the robe he may go and stand where the attendant can see him, up to six times. If he does not get it and he asks more than three times or stands more than six times, and then gets it, it is [an offence of Confession with Forfeiture.]

“If after asking and standing the full amount he does not get the robe he must go and tell whoever brought the money saying: “That which you brought did not become available to me,” and he should also tell him to ask for his money back in case it should be lost.”

(Nis. Pāc. 10; Nv pp.9–10)

Or in Summary:

“When a fund has been set up with a steward indicated by a bhikkhu: Obtaining an article from the fund as a result of having prompted the steward more than the allowable number of times is [an offence of Confession with Forfeiture.]”

(Nis. Pāc. 10; BMC p.206)
The ‘robe-price’ remains the donor’s money but in the keeping of the bhikkhu’s steward. In practice, the ‘robe-price’ may be used for other allowable requisites. It is important for donors to check about the way of practice of the particular bhikkhu(s) to whom they want to make an offering. Bhikkhus who follow the Rule strictly will behave differently from those who are more relaxed. The former will be very careful with their speech concerning the acceptance of money and the intending donor has to make allowance for such indirect talk.
Buying and Selling

IN THE BUDDHA’S TIME, the ‘group-of-six’ bhikkhus engaged in buying and selling using money. Lay people seeing this, and thinking all bhikkhus did the same, started to complain saying, ‘How can these Buddhist monks buy and sell using money, they are behaving just like lay people who enjoy the pleasures of the senses’. The rule was then set down:

“If a bhikkhu engages in buying and selling with money (meaning whatever is used as money), it is [an offence of Confession with Forfeiture.]”

“Obtaining gold or money through trade is [an offence of Confession with Forfeiture.]”

(Note the different interpretation in the above translations.

According to the texts[108] this would include investing money for a monetary return or even changing money into another currency. (For the intricacies of this see BMC p.213–230)
Barter or Trade

The rule about bhikkhus and bartering originated in the Buddha’s time like this: Through fine sewing and dyeing, Ven. Upananda was skilled at turning rags into attractive-looking robes. A wandering ascetic wanted one such robe and offered to trade his own costly, quality robe for the beautifully turned out rag-robe of Ven. Upananda. Ven. Upananda asked him if he was really sure and then they agreed to the exchange. But later the wandering ascetic changed his mind and went to Ven. Upananda to get his good-quality robe back. Ven. Upananda refused to give it back. The wandering ascetic became angry and said that even lay people returned unsatisfactory bartered goods. Therefore, this ruling was made:

“Should any bhikkhu engage in various types of trade, (the article obtained) must be forfeited and confessed.”  (Nis. Pāc. 20; BMC p.225)
‘Untouchable’ Things?

In the Buddha’s time a bhikkhu went to bathe in the river and found a purse of money lost by a brahmin. The owner returned and, to escape having to pay the customary reward, pretended that some of the money was suspiciously missing. The rule (Pāc. 84) therefore prohibits a bhikkhu from picking up lost valuables.

However, there is an exception to this rule. The qualification is that if the bhikkhu finds valuables in the monastery or in the place where he dwells, he is required (and falls into an offence if he fails) to pick them up and keep them safe for the owner. This shows that it is not the object as such that is the problem—as if ‘by not touching it one is free of it’—but the care one must take that one’s greed and attachment are not drawn in to contaminate the object, and that one is not the victim of other people’s greed.

The Commentary also prohibits bhikkhus from touching unsuitable objects, which includes gold, silver, and valuable things. [109]
Lodgings

Shelter is the third of the Requisites (see The Four Requisites, page 97.) The Buddha first suggested[110] that the bhikkhu should normally stay at the root of a sheltering tree. (His own Awakening took place at the foot of the Bodhi tree.) However, later, when the Rains Retreat period became established and bhikkhus were more settled after their wanderings through the forest, lodgings or kuṭī came to be offered and built. (In fact, it then became a requirement to stay in a more sheltered place during the three months of the Rains Retreat.)[111]

The bhikkhu may also voluntarily take on the special dhutaṅga (tudong) practices. These are more usually seen among forest monks and are distinctive of their way of practice: for example, they will delight in living in the forest, in the open, in caves, in the cemetery or burning ground, and when staying in a monastery will be happy to accept whatever lodging is offered.
Luxurious Lodgings

Originally the kuṭi or lodging may not have been much more than a hut with a plaster or earthen floor. Rules were formulated as to their size and luxury. For example, the sixth Saṅghādisesa Rule—remember that this is the second most serious category of rules requiring a formal meeting of the Community—arose when bhikkhus were having extravagant huts built for themselves. They had no sponsors and were therefore begging materials from lay people, “saying, again and again, ‘Give me this, give me that…’”. The people became burdened by all this begging and when they saw the bhikkhus, any bhikkhus, coming they would run away and hide.

“Building a plastered hut—or having it built—withou$$t a sponsor, destined for one’s own use, without having obtained the Community’s approval, is a [serious offence entailing meetings of the Sangha.]

Building a plastered hut—or having it built—withou$$t a sponsor, destined for one’s own use, exceeding the standard measurements, is also a [serious offence entailing meetings of the Sangha.]

(Summary Saṅgh. 6; BMC p.128)
The Commentary explains that it must be quite a permanent structure to come under this ruling. Depending on how long one understands the ancient measure of the sugata-span to be, the kuti or hut should not be more than approximately 3 by 1.75 metres. (See BMC p.125) The commentarial tradition would put it three times this size.

Furniture

Bhikkhus are allowed to have a low bed on which to sleep and a stool on which to sit in order to prevent dampness from the earthen floor, but often where the lodgings are wooden floored (and in tropical climates) the bhikkhu will sleep on the floor on an ordinary sleeping mat. In cold climates this may have to be adjusted using the Great Standards.

Avoiding ‘high and luxurious beds’ is also a feature of the Eight Precepts[4] for lay people temporarily living the celibate life.
(IV) RIGHT LIVELIHOOD
FOR A BHIKKHU
Teaching Dhamma

The bhikkhu’s life should be wholly preparing him to gain insight into Dhamma. Only then will he have the wisdom to communicate anything of real value to others when the time is appropriate and the audience properly receptive. (A monk will usually wait for an invitation to speak on Dhamma, so there is no question about him proselytizing.) Teaching Dhamma, however, is not easy. If it is badly done, it can cause more misunderstanding than understanding.

The fourth Confession Rule came to be set down when the group-of-six monks taught Dhamma to lay people by rote, which caused the lay followers to feel disrespect for the monks:

“If a bhikkhu teaches Dhamma to an unordained person (one who is not a bhikkhu), repeating it together word by word, it is [an offence of Confession].” (Pāc. 4; Nv p.14)

“To rehearse the Dhamma word by word … was the method to teach others to memorize when there were no books. This method was formerly used in (Thai) temples and popularly known by the name ‘studying books in the evening’. The aim of prohibiting pronouncing (Scripture) together is clearly shown in the original story of this training-rule which was to prevent the pupils from looking down on the teacher.” (Pāt. 1969 Ed. p.159)

Sixteen of the Sekhiya Training rules set down how and to whom a bhikkhu should teach Dhamma. These rules are also concerned with the etiquette of showing respect, respect not only for the bhikkhu but more importantly for the Dhamma that he is teaching. (The Great Standards would imply here that modern ways of showing respect and disrespect would be similarly covered by these rules.) These rules prohibit a bhikkhu from teaching anyone he considers to be showing disrespect to the Dhamma. Here is a summary of these Sekhiya Trainings:

“I will not teach Dhamma to someone who is not sick but who:
—has an umbrella; a wooden stick (club); weapon in their hand.
—is wearing (wooden-soled) sandals/shoes; is in a vehicle; is on a bed (or couch); is sitting clasping the knees; has a head wrapping (turban); whose head is covered; who is sitting on a seat while I am sitting on the ground; who is sitting on a high seat while I am sitting on a low seat;
who is sitting while I am standing; who is walking in front of me while I am walking behind; who is walking on a pathway while I am walking beside the pathway.” (Sekhiya 57-72; See BMC pp.505–508)

How these rules are observed may diverge in different communities. Some will strictly follow the above while others will be more flexible according to modern conditions. As Venerable Brahmavangso remarks:

“…These Sekhiyas ensure that one teaches Dhamma only to an audience which shows respect. One may not expound from a soapbox in the marketplace … to the indifference of passers by. However it is common these days in the West for a seated audience, wearing their shoes and maybe even a hat, to respectfully listen to a speaker standing at a lectern … and as the audience is considered to be behaving respectfully according to the prevailing norms there seems no reason why a monk may not teach Dhamma in such a situation.” (AB)
Robbery by False Pretences

If a bhikkhu lies about his spiritual attainments, it may be ground for the offence of ‘Defeat’. The originating circumstances for this Rule occurred during a famine when food was scarce and many bhikkhus found alms food difficult to obtain. A group of these monks devised a scheme where they told lay people of each other’s attainments of ‘superior human states’, often deliberately lying to impress them. The faithful lay people gave alms to such ‘special’ bhikkhus thinking that it would bring greater merit so they and their families went without food in order to feed those monks. Later, when the Buddha knew of this he rebuked them and described them as the worst of the ‘Five Great Thieves’—immoral monks who obtain their alms food as a robber does. He set down:

“A bhikkhu who boasts of [‘superior human states’,] which he has not in fact attained, commits [an offence of Defeat.]” (Pār. 4; Nv p.5)

“Deliberately lying to another person that one has attained a superior human state is [an offence of Defeat.]” (Summary Pār. 4; BMC p.86)
The Commentary classes ‘superior human states’ (uttarimanussadhamma) as either: meditative absorption (jhāna), and certain psychic powers (abhiññā) or the path and fruit leading up to Nibbāna.

A deliberate lie is normally an offence of Confession (Pāc. 1) but this deliberate false avowal of meditative attainment is classed as the most serious ‘Defeater’ Offence. This shows how much more damaging it was considered to be. When a ‘guru-like’ bhikkhu falsely puts himself forward as enlightened, his lies can be destructive not only to himself and his followers but to the whole of Buddhism.

“It may be hard to imagine in the present time why falsely claiming superior human conditions should be judged so severely. However, by reflecting that bhikkhus are totally dependent upon the generosity and goodwill of believing lay people, one may be able to appreciate the situation better. By falsely claiming high spiritual attainments a bhikkhu is equivalent to a swindler or defrauder, but in the worst way, since this involves spiritual fraud—dealing with the most precious and profound aspects of human existence.” (HS ch.15)

A bhikkhu commits no offence when he has no intention to make superior claims, even if it is wrongly understood or misconstrued that way. If a bhikkhu is insane, psychotically believing his own delusions of grandeur and making extravagant claims of his own enlightenment, he receives exemption from any offence.[113]

The eighth Confession rule is closely connected with this one of Defeat but there the ‘announcement’ is true. Even so, indulging in such disclosures to lay people requires confession especially when, as in the origin-story, a bhikkhu does so just to obtain more alms. The Lord Buddha criticized the showing off of even genuine supernormal attainments:

“To tell an unordained person of one’s actual superior human attainments is [an offence of Confession.]”

(Rule Summary, Pāc. 8; BMC p.288)
Proper Behaviour Outside the Monastery

A bhikkhu can teach in many ways, not just by speech. There is the famous occasion mentioned in the Pāli texts when the future right-hand disciple of Buddha, Sāriputta, first saw a bhikkhu going on alms round:

“Sāriputta the wanderer saw Ven. Assaji going for alms in Rājagaha: gracious ... his eyes downcast, his every movement consummate. On seeing him, the thought occurred to him: ‘Surely, of those in this world who are arahants or have entered the path to arahantship, this is one. What if I was to approach him and question him …” (BMC p.490)

Ven. Assaji’s countenance and demeanour were a ‘teaching’ so impressive that Sāriputta went and became a bhikkhu and a great arahant.

When a bhikkhu goes into a public place, he stands out because of the robes he wears. Whatever he does is noticed and reflects back on his community and the Sangha in general. As Venerable Thiradhammo writes:

“The bhikkhu lifestyle is for the sole purpose of realizing Nibbana. In striving towards this end, it was recognized that certain kinds of behavior are detrimental, distracting or simply unhelpful, and are also unsuitable for an alms-mendicant. Many kinds of improper behaviour are not actually immoral, but rather put energy in the wrong direction or are expressions of a careless attitude. Some kinds of behaviour can lead to lay people’s loss of faith, some are immature or childish, some bad or ugly, and some, quite malicious or nasty.” (HS ch.17)

Therefore, there are a number of training rules to remind the bhikkhu about correct deportment. The first twenty-six Sekhiya Training rules cover proper behaviour in public places. They may also explain the sometimes seemingly antisocial behaviour of a bhikkhu, who may not look one in the face or immediately say a “Good Morning”. Here is a selection:

“When in inhabited areas, I will … wear the under and upper robe properly; be properly covered; go well restrained as to my movements; keep my eyes looking down; sit with little sound [of voice].”
“When in inhabited areas, I will not … hitch up my robes; go or sit laughing loudly; go or sit fidgeting; swing my arms; shake my head; put my arms akimbo; cover my head with a cloth; walk on tiptoe; sit clasping the knees.” (See BMC pp. 490—494)
There is always an exception in the Sekhiya Training Rules for “one who is ill” so that a bhikkhu may, for example, cover his head when the weather is unbearably cold or the sun dangerously hot. The same applies to footwear, which normally should not be worn in inhabited areas. [114]
Socializing and Wrong Resort

‘GOING OUT ON THE TOWN’ is not appropriate for bhikkhus and is covered in several rules. The eighty-fifth Confession Rule, describes how the ‘group-of-six’ monks went to the village in the afternoon and sat around gossiping, so that lay people compared them to householders. Going outside the monastery (other than on the morning alms round) was therefore regulated with this rule:

“Entering a village, town, or city during the period after noon until the following dawn, without having taken leave of an available bhikkhu—unless there is an emergency—is [an offence of Confession.]
(Summary Pāc. 85; BMC p.470)

Persons or places of ‘wrong resort’ for a bhikkhu are divided into six sorts (EV,II,pp.178–180). These are spending too much time socializing with ‘unmarried women’—widows and spinsters (divorcees) or with bhikkhunīs. (See also the rules on speaking with women, page 90) ‘Wrong resort’ also includes keeping company with sex-aberrants (paṇḍaka), with prostitutes, and going to taverns.
A bhikkhu is prohibited from going to see and hear dancing, singing, and music. (In modern circumstances this will also concern films, videos, TV, etc.) This is similar to the Eight and Ten Precepts.[4] (See EV,II,p.72)

“In the Buddha’s time one could only hear music at a live performance—hence seeing singing and music. However, following the Great Standards, it would seem appropriate to include contemporary forms of entertainment such as dancing, singing and music on television, videos, radios, tape-recorders and stereos. Most comprehensively, this applies to seeing or hearing any kind of entertainment like a ‘pleasure-enjoying householder’. Listening or seeing for education is another matter.”

(HS ch.17)
Wrong Ways of Behaviour

Playful and wrong conduct (anācāra) for a bhikkhu is, for example, playing like a child with toys or games, etc.; or making garlands of flowers, etc.

Bhikkhus are also prohibited from studying or speaking on ‘low animal-like knowledge’ (tiracchāna-vijjā).

“The explanation of [low animal-like knowledge] seems to cover all general subjects which are not related to the Dhamma of bhikkhus. [These are:] knowledge of enchantments making men and women love each other; knowledge for making this or that person fall into disaster; knowledge for using spirits or showing various kinds of magic; knowledge of prediction, such as knowing beforehand lottery results; knowledge leading to self-delusion, such as transmuting mercury to gain the supernatural, as in the transmuting of silver and copper into gold.

“These knowledges are [‘low animal-like knowledge’] because they are knowledge of doubtful things which are deceptive or deluding, not being true knowledge. A teacher of this is a deceiver and a pupil is one who practises to deceive, or he is just a foolish, deluded person.”

(EV,II,pp.120–121)
Wrong Livelihood

Wrong livelihood for a bhikkhu is divided into two:

One category concerns a bhikkhu searching for a living in a way that is also considered wrong by worldly norms. For example, robbing or deceiving others by claiming to be enlightened and receiving gifts and support because of people’s belief. (See Robbery by False Pretences above)

The second category involves making a living that is wrong according to the Vinaya. For example: begging or asking from an unsuitable person or at an unsuitable time (see Invitation, page 99); thinking to gain something by giving a little but hoping for much in return; investing to gain interest; making a living by trade, for instance, giving medical treatment for reward.[115]

Also to seek reward from:

“the ceremony for [chanting] paritta (verses of protection), that is, making holy water and the sacred thread, the blowing of a charmed formula onto a person by a bhikkhu is also prohibited. … It is allowed only to recite the paritta [protection verses], but this also occurs later and is not found in the Pāli [texts]. … [This is wrong livelihood and a] bhikkhu who seeks his living in this way is called alajjī, ‘one who has no shame’.”

(EV,II,p.129)
‘Corrupting Families’

The very serious Saṅghādisesa Rule (requiring formal meetings of the Community) of ‘corrupting families’[116] concerns the proper relationship that bhikkhus should develop with lay followers.

It originated when two of the oft-transgressing ‘group-of-six’ monks neglected their Dhamma practice and behaved improperly[117] in order to become popular with lay people. The lay people came to enjoy the sociable, playful monks so much that when more composed, right-practising monks came by they were considered snobbish and dull.

“If a bhikkhu corrupts families—in other words he flatters and fawns on lay people—and other bhikkhus drive him away from the monastery, and in return he criticizes them and if another bhikkhu then tells him that he must not do this, but he will not listen, a Sangha should recite the [formal admonishment] to induce him to abandon this mode of behaviour. If he does not abandon it, it [entails initial and subsequent meetings of the Community]”    (Saṅgh. 13; Nv p.7)
A bhikkhu guilty of habitually indulging in these practices (sometimes called ‘vile and low conduct’ or pāpasamācāra) should be ‘banished’ from his particular Community until he reforms.

Of course, a bhikkhu may concern himself in lay people’s affairs if it relates to religious duties. Also:

“the business of one’s mother and father, or of persons who prepare to be ordained, called paṇḍupalāsa (lit., yellow leaves, ready to fall off the tree), or of one’s own veyyāvaccakara (steward, supporter, pupil) can be done by him even though these are apart from religious duties.”

(EV,II,pp.121–122)

The relationship between the bhikkhu and his supporter should be a very special one:

“…A bhikkhu who is complete in good conduct does not lower himself to become the intimate of a family in the same way as a lay man may do. He is not aggressive or destructive but shows a heart of loving-kindness and conducts himself in a moderate way, thus causing good faith and reverence to arise in them towards himself. He is then called kulapasādako (one in whom families have faith). He is the splendour of the [Teaching]...
“Bhikkhus who are not strict lower themselves to become vile men but bhikkhus who are over-strict are not interested in showing [compassion] in helping householders in various ways.” (EV,II,pp.123–124)

A bhikkhu’s wrong mode of livelihood also includes:

“running messages and errands for kings, ministers of state, householders, etc. A modern example would be participating in political campaigns.” (BMC p.152)
Intruding on Families

The meaning of one of the Confession rules is uncertain—as can be seen by the different translations below—but it might explain why visiting bhikkhus may be reluctant to intrude into a family’s space.

The Forty-third Confession Rule (Pāc. 43) arose from Ven. Upananda’s visit to a man and his wife who were sitting in their bedroom together. The husband told his wife to give Ven. Upananda a meal and when that was finished requested him to leave. The wife noticed that her husband was becoming sexually excited, and not wishing to participate, asked Ven. Upananda to stay. He stayed. This happened three times after which the husband stormed out of the house indignant at Ven. Upananda’s behaviour.

The Rule has been understood in rather different ways:
“Should any bhikkhu intrude upon and sit down in (the bedroom of) a family with both persons, (the man and the wife, present, one of whom does not agree to his remaining), it entails Confession.”

(Pāc. 43; Pāt. 1969 Ed. p.163)

“To sit down intruding on a man and a woman in their private quarters—when one or both are sexually aroused, and when another bhikkhu is not present—is [an offence of Confession.]”

(Summary Pāc. 43; BMC p.385)

“If a bhikkhu sits down, intruding on a family while they are taking food, it is [an offence of Confession.]”

(Pāc. 43; NVp19)

“A monk who intrudes into and sits down in a house where husband and wife are by themselves enjoying each other’s company, commits [an offence of Confession.]”

(Pāc. 43; BBC p.128)
(V) MISCELLANEOUS
Disputes

When the Buddha went to reside at Ghositārāma in the city of Kosambi, he found a dispute had arisen between the bhikkhus there. One group of monks under a ‘Vinaya-expert’ had accused the ‘Dhamma-expounder’ leader (of another group) of a minor wrong-doing offence. The ‘Dhamma-expounder’ bhikkhu would not admit to this so dissension arose between the two groups. (See also Strictness and Blaming Others, page 6.) Even when the Lord Buddha pointed out to both groups the dangers in this and how to put matters to right, they still could not agree. So the Lord Buddha left them and went to reside by himself in the Rakkhitavan Forest.

The lay people of Kosambi blamed the quarrelling bhikkhus for causing the Buddha to go away and in consequence they agreed together not to pay respect to those bhikkhus. When the bhikkhus came to their houses, they would not give alms food, desiring them to ‘go away, disrobe, or else return to the way of practice pleasing to the Lord Buddha’. After this treatment, both groups of bhikkhus came to their senses and agreed to see the Lord Buddha where the dispute was properly resolved. (See EV,III,p.129)
A set of formal procedures are set down to resolve disputes within the Community. They are summarized in the Adhikaraṇasamathā ‘rules’, the last seven of the 227 Rules of the Pāṭimokkha. (See Appendix B, Communal Harmony)
Schools of Buddhism

For an outsider, one of the most notable features of Buddhism is the number and diversity of Buddhist schools. When disputes (such as that described above) are left unresolved there is a tendency for the formation of nikāya or ‘schools’, which are passed on through ‘ordination lineage’ to future generations of bhikkhus. Historically, as Buddhism spread over Asia,[118] the practice of local Communities gradually adapted to new circumstances. The originally slight divergences grew so that today not only do we have the major Schools of the ‘South’ (Theravāda) and the ‘North’ (Mahayāna, Tibetan), and ‘East’ (Mahayāna, Ch’an, Son, Zen, etc.) but also myriad minor local differences.

“Coming down to later times, when the different groups became established in places foreign to the original lands, those two [schools] became very far apart both in the texts and in the language for chanting, all the way to garments and customs—just compare for instance, Vietnamese monks with Thai monks.”

(EV,III,p.230)
“[In the Theravāda School,] this reached the point where the intonations used in speaking Pāli [language] differed: such as ours in Thailand, those in Sri Lanka, Burma and the Mons, for example. Each group holds that their way is better than that of the other groups. Even though they have contact with each other, they are not united as a single group, and minor [schools] arise out of them, determined according to nationality…

“In these national [schools] some [schools] would thrive at certain times, until other [schools] would take them as a model to be followed … [by] some bhikkhus requesting entry to their group by taking new ordination or re-ordination. … A [school] which takes the methods of another [school] will make further differences in its methods until they are a separate [school]. These call themselves by names different from the nationality, such as our [Thai] Mahā-nikāya and Dhammayuttikaikāya; the Burmese Culagaṇṭhī and Mahāgaṇṭhī. [One no longer finds these names, now there are the Sudhamma Nikāya (the largest group), the Shwegyin Nikāya and the small Dvāra Nikāya]; and the Upālivamsa, Marammāvamsa and Rāmaññavamsa of Sri Lanka. (Now
There seems to be a natural tendency for the more strictly practising Communities to attract more lay respect and therefore more lay support—including more material support.[119] However, as ‘luxuries tend to become necessities’ there is often a corresponding decline in Vinaya practice.

The next stage seems to be that when the Vinaya practice has deteriorated into laxness, a group of monks will spontaneously be attracted to going back to higher standards and will go and live at a monastery together to put that into effect, eventually forming a new group or nikāya. This stricter practice attracts lay support, and that forces the more lax communities to reform their ways. And then as standards decline…

Another way that the local Vinaya practice is rejuvenated is by the import of strictly practising monks from elsewhere to form a model community. For example, Sri Lankan monks were invited to Siam more than five hundred years ago, and some centuries later Thai monks were themselves invited back to Sri Lanka after the local Saṅgha had died out.
Inviting foreign monks to reform the local practice was often at the instigation of the Buddhist king and seemed to have worked quite well. However, attempts by central authorities to forcibly rejoin their own local schools (nikāyas) of monks have seldom been successful, especially as Buddhism has never favoured the use of violence in religious suppression. What often happens is that instead of merging two nikāyas into one, it forces another sect to form. Then there are three—the two original plus a new combined sect. This is probably because the Saṅgha is a local community structure that is oriented to the wider Saṅgha of bhikkhus by the Vinaya. Thus the Vinaya, rather than any central authority, is what brings groups together.
Etiquette

The Buddha allowed several ways of showing respect to others ‘for the beauty and good of the community (of both monks and lay people)’. These include:

vandanā—bowing or ‘showing reverence with the five points’, i.e. the forehead, two forearms, and the two knees uṭṭhāna—standing up to welcome aṇjalī—joining the palms together in respect sāmīcikamma, any other ways of showing respect that are beautiful and good. (See EV,II,p.78)

Another ancient way of showing respect is circumambulation or walking around the object of veneration three times in a clockwise direction—so that one’s right shoulder is towards, for example, the cetiya, bodhi tree or pagoda.

In many parts of Asia it is considered extremely rude to point one’s feet at anyone or any religious object. An example, is found in the Confession Rule 51 (Pāc. 51, see page 143) where a highly gifted bhikkhu is made drunk and in his stupor turns and points his feet at the Buddha.
Vandana Thai-style. Note that the male and female movements (start and) finish slightly differently.

Bhikkhus use these ways of etiquette to show respect to those who have been bhikkhus for longer than themselves, irrespective of their actual age. A ‘younger’ bhikkhu may call another bhikkhu, “Bhante”, (“Venerable Sir” or “Reverend Sir”), and, similarly, a lay person may use this as a general form of address to bhikkhus. Each country will have its own way of addressing older, more senior bhikkhus appropriate to their age and experience. (See below.)
During his ordination, the bhikkhu-candidate is asked formally for his name. His Preceptor (usually) will have given him a Pāli name and this is what he will use. However, later, on less formal occasions, he may be addressed differently. This variety of terms of address can be quite confusing for outsiders. For example, in Thailand, the monk will more often use his given name (from before his ordination) with an honorific preceding it appropriate to his monk’s seniority and rank. The Pāli name, and title if any, would be added on more formal occasions. I understand that in Sri Lanka, and sometimes in Burma, it is the bhikkhu’s place of origin or residence that may be prefixed to his Pāli name.

Some monks may use the description Bhikkhu before their Pāli name (Bhikkhu X) while others will use it as a suffix (X Bhikkhu). If they are more than ten years in the robe they may use Thera (Elder) and if very senior Mahāthera. (See also page 49.)

There are many other titles and ranks for senior bhikkhus. The king (in Thailand) or government often confer these in recognition of service or administrative ability. When administration of all the bhikkhus of the country is subsumed under central government departments, it may then be divided up into regions and districts under the supervision of the local senior ‘respectable’ monks. However, underlying all of this is the Vinaya Rule that still guides the traditional ways of the bhikkhu life, without class or privilege, and it remains the foundation for continued Dhamma practice as it has done for the last twenty-five centuries.

Probably the most universally acceptable form of address for any bhikkhu is “Bhante” or “Venerable Sir.”
APPENDIX A: LAY PRECEPTS

Anyone, of any religion or none, can appreciate these fundamental, practical guidelines about actions and speech suggested by the Buddha. When we are mindful enough to realize that we have a choice about our actions and speech, these Precepts are there to help answer questions of, “What should I do, what should I say?” They are practical and down to earth without requiring one to promise first to believe in anything supernatural. Like the lane markings on the highway, they help speed one on one’s journey without colliding with any other travellers or going completely off the road. The Precepts mark the straightforward way of living that harms or hurts no one, while offering one the choice to transform one’s life through growing mindfulness into perfect virtue, wisdom and compassion.
The Five Precepts

The Five Precepts form one of the essential elements of following the Lord Buddha’s Way. Undertaking these Precepts (and ‘Going for Refuge’) are often the first formal affirmation of a new Buddhist. This is normally done by repeating after a monk these phrases (in Pāli):

“I undertake the training precept:

1) to abstain from taking life.

2) to abstain from taking what is not given.

3) to abstain from sexual misconduct.

4) to abstain from false speech.

5) to abstain from intoxicants causing heedlessness.”
The Eight Precepts

The Five can then be refined into the Eight Precepts:

“I undertake the training precept …

1) to abstain from taking life.

2) to abstain from taking what is not given.

3) to abstain from unchastity.

4) to abstain from false speech.

5) to abstain from intoxicants causing heedlessness.

6) to abstain from untimely eating.

7) to abstain from dancing, singing, music and unseemly shows, from wearing garlands, smartening with scents, and beautifying with perfumes.

8) to abstain from the use of high and large luxurious couches.”
Uposatha Observance Days

In the West, the Sabbath—either Saturday or Sunday—has been normally the special religious observance day of the week. In Buddhism, which continues to follow the traditional lunar calendar,[126] the day set apart for special religious observance is the fortnightly day of the full and new moons, with the quarter moon days in between.[127] These full and new-moon days, called Uposatha Days, are when the bhikkhus gather to listen to a recitation of their Pāṭimokkha Rule.

The weekly observance day on the quarter-moon day is when lay devotees gather in the local monastery to observe precepts more strictly and listen to and speak about Dhamma. The basic, minimum standard of precepts for practising lay Buddhists is the Five Precepts. (Such lay people who are following the Buddha’s Teaching are know as upāsaka (male) and upāsikā (female)).[128] However, on the Observance day (or other special occasion), they may decide to train under the Eight Precepts, which brings them closer to how the monk or nun practises.[129]
The Ten Precepts

The novice (sāmañera) has Ten Precepts, as does the dasasīla mata nun. These are the same Eight as above, however the seventh precept is split into two and an extra tenth precept is added. Thus:

1) to abstain from taking life.

2) to abstain from taking what is not given.

3) to abstain from unchastity.

4) to abstain from false speech.

5) to abstain from intoxicants causing heedlessness.

6) to abstain from untimely eating.

7) to abstain from dancing, singing, music and unseemly shows.

8) to abstain from wearing garlands, smartening with scents, and beautifying with perfumes.

9) to abstain from the use of high and large luxurious couches.

10) to abstain from accepting gold and silver (money).
This book has been mostly focused on those of the 227 Pāṭimokkha Rules that are of concern to the lay devotee. Here we will include a summary of most of the remaining rules taken from Venerable Thanissaro’s Introduction to the Pāṭimokkha Rules, where he grouped the rules into these categories:

Right Speech

Making an unfounded charge to a bhikkhu that he has committed a pārājika offence, in hopes of having him disrobed, is a saṅghādisesa offence. [Saṅgh.8]

Distorting the evidence while accusing a bhikkhu of having committed a pārājika offence, in hopes of having him disrobed, is a saṅghādisesa offence. [Saṅgh.9]

Making an unfounded charge to a bhikkhu—or getting someone else to make the charge to him—that he is guilty of a saṅghādisesa offence is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc.76]
Tale-bearing among bhikkhus, in hopes of winning favour or causing a rift, is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc.3]

An insult made with malicious intent to another bhikkhu is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc.2]

Right Action

...Intentionally causing oneself to emit semen, or getting someone else to cause one to emit semen—except during a dream—is a saṅghādisesa offence. [Saṅgha.1]...

Having given another bhikkhu a robe on a condition and then—angry and displeased—snatching it back or having it snatched back is a nissaggiya pācittiya offence. [Nis. Pāc. 25]

Making use of cloth or a bowl stored under shared ownership—unless the shared ownership has been rescinded or one is taking the item on trust—is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 59]

Right Livelihood

Keeping a piece of robe-cloth for more than ten days without determining it for use or placing it under dual ownership—except when the end-of-vassa or kaṭhina privileges are in effect—is a nissaggiya pācittiya offence. [Nis. Pāc.1] Being in a separate zone from any of one’s three robes at dawn—except when the end-of-vassa or kaṭhina privileges are in effect, or one has received formal authorization from the Community—is a nissaggiya pācittiya offence. [Nis. Pāc.2]

Keeping out-of-season cloth for more than 30 days when it is not enough to make a requisite and one has expectation for more—except when the end-of-vassa and kaṭhina privileges are in effect—is a nissaggiya pācittiya offence. [Nis. Pāc.3] …

When two or more lay people who are not one’s relatives are planning to get separate robes for one, but have yet to ask one what kind of robe one wants: Receiving a robe from them after asking them to pool their funds to get one robe—out of a desire for something fine—is a nissaggiya pācittiya offence. [Nis. Pāc.9]

Making a felt blanket/rug with silk mixed in it for one’s own use—or having it made—is a nissaggiya pācittiya offence. [Nis. Pāc.11]

Making a felt blanket/rug entirely of black wool for one’s own use—or having it made—is a nissaggiya pācittiya offence. [Nis. Pāc.12]

Making a felt blanket/rug that is more than one-half black wool for one’s own use—or having it made—is a nissaggiya pācittiya offence. [Nis. Pāc.13]
Unless one has received authorization to do so from the Community, making a felt blanket/rug for one’s own use—or having it made—less than six years after one’s last one was made is a nissaggiya pācittiya offence. [Nis. Pāc.14] Making a felt sitting rug for one’s own use—or having it made—without incorporating a one-span piece of old felt is a nissaggiya pācittiya offence. [Nis. Pāc.15]

Seeking and receiving a rains-bathing cloth before the fourth month of the hot season is a nissaggiya pācittiya offence. Using a rains-bathing cloth before the last two weeks of the fourth month of the hot season is also a nissaggiya pācittiya offence. [Nis. Pāc.24]...

Keeping robe cloth offered in urgency past the end of the robe season after having accepted it during the last eleven days of the Rains Retreat is a nissaggiya pācittiya offence. [Nis. Pāc.28]...

Making use of an unmarked robe is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc.58]

Acquiring an overly large sitting cloth after making it—or having it made—for one’s own use is a pācittiya offence requiring that one cut the cloth down to size before confessing the offence. [Pāc.89]

Acquiring an overly large skin-eruption covering cloth after making it—or having it made—for one’s own use is a pācittiya offence requiring that one cut the cloth down to size before confessing the offence. [Pāc.90]

Acquiring an overly large rains-bathing cloth after making it—or having it made—for one’s own use is a pācittiya offence requiring that one cut the cloth down to size before confessing the offence. [Pāc.91]

Acquiring an overly large robe after making it—or having it made—for one’s own use is a pācittiya offence requiring that one cut the robe down to size before confessing the offence. [Pāc.92]

Food

Eating food obtained from the same public alms centre two days running, unless one is too ill to leave the centre, is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc.31] …

Accepting more than three bowlfuls of food that the donors prepared for their own use as presents or for provisions for a journey is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc.34]

Eating staple or non-staple food, after accepting it—when one is neither ill nor invited—at the home of a family formally designated as “in training,” is a patidesaniya offence. [Pat. 3]…
Lodgings

When a bhikkhu is building or repairing a large dwelling for his own use, using resources donated by another, he may not reinforce the window or door frames with more than three layers of roofing material or plaster. To exceed this is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc.19]

Acquiring a bed or bench with legs longer than eight Sugata fingerbreadths after making it—or having it made—for one’s own use is a pācittiya offence requiring that one cut the legs down before confessing the offence. [Pāc.87]

Acquiring a bed or bench stuffed with cotton down after making it—or having it made—for one’s own use is a pācittiya offence requiring that one remove the stuffing before confessing the offence. [Pāc.88]…

Bowls and other requisites

Carrying wool that has not been made into cloth or yarn for more than three leagues is a nissaggiya pācittiya offence. [Nis. Pāc.16]

Keeping an alms bowl for more than ten days without determining it for use or placing it under dual ownership is a nissaggiya pācittiya offence. [Nis. Pāc.21]
Acquiring a needle box made of ivory, bone or horn after making it—or having it made—for one’s own use is a pàcittiya offence requiring that one break the box before confessing the offence. [Nis. Pàc.86]

Communal Harmony

To persist in one’s attempts at a schism, after the third announcement of a formal rebuke in a meeting of the Community, is a sañghādisesa offence. [Sañgh. 10]

To persist in supporting a potential schismatic, after the third announcement of a formal rebuke in a meeting of the Community, is a sañghādisesa offence. [Sañgh. 11]

To persist in being difficult to admonish, after the third announcement of a formal rebuke in the Community, is a sañghādisesa offence. [Sañgh. 12]

To persist—after the third announcement of a formal rebuke in the Community—in criticizing an act of banishment performed against oneself is a sañghādisesa offence. [Sañgh. 13]...

Telling an unordained person of another bhikkhu’s serious offence—unless one is authorized by the Community to do so—is a pàcittiya offence. [Pàc. 9]
Persistently replying evasively or keeping silent when being questioned in a meeting of the Community in order to conceal one’s own offences—after a formal charge of evasiveness or uncooperativeness has been brought against one—is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 12]

If a Community official is innocent of prejudice, criticizing him within earshot of another bhikkhu is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 13]

When one has set a bed, bench, mattress or stool belonging to the Community out in the open: Leaving its immediate vicinity without putting it away or arranging to have it put away is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 14]

When one has spread bedding out in a dwelling belonging to the Community: Departing from the monastery without putting it away or arranging to have it put away is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 15]

Encroaching on another bhikkhu’s sleeping or sitting place in a dwelling belonging to the Community, with the sole purpose of making him uncomfortable and forcing him to leave, is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 16]

Causing a bhikkhu to be evicted from a dwelling belonging to the Community—when one’s primary motive is anger—is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 17]
Sitting or lying down on a bed or bench with detachable legs on an unplanked loft in a dwelling belonging to the Community, is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 18]

Deliberately tricking another bhikkhu into breaking Pācittiya 35, in hopes of finding fault with him, is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 36]

Speaking or acting disrespectfully when being admonished by another bhikkhu for a breach of the training rules is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 54]

Agitating to reopen an issue, knowing that it was properly dealt with, is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 63]

Not informing other bhikkhus of a serious offence that one knows another bhikkhu has committed—either out of a desire to protect him from having to undergo the penalty, or to protect him from the jeering remarks of other bhikkhus—is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 64]

Acting as the preceptor in the ordination of a person one knows to be less than 20 years old is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 65]

Refusing to give up the wrong view that there is nothing wrong in intentionally transgressing the Buddha’s ordinances—after the third announcement of a formal rebuke in a meeting of the Community—is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 68]

Consorting, joining in communion or lying down under the same roof with a bhikkhu who has been suspended and not been restored—knowing that such is the case—is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 69]

Supporting, receiving services from, consorting or lying down under the same roof with an expelled novice—knowing that he has been expelled—is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 70]

Saying something as a ploy to excuse oneself from training under a training rule when being admonished by another bhikkhu for a breach of the rule is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 71]

Criticizing the discipline in the presence of another bhikkhu, in hopes of preventing its study, is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 72]

Using half-truths to deceive others into believing that one is ignorant of the rules in the Patimokkha, after one has already heard the Patimokkha in full three times, and a formal act exposing one’s deceit has been brought against one, is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 73]
Giving a blow to another bhikkhu, when motivated by anger, is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 74]

Making a threatening gesture against another bhikkhu when motivated by anger is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 75]

Saying to another bhikkhu that he may have broken a rule unknowingly, simply for the purpose of causing him anxiety, is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 77]

Eavesdropping on bhikkhus involved in an argument over an issue—with the intention of using what they say against them—is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 78]

Complaining about a formal act of the Community to which one gave one’s consent—if one knows that the act was carried out in accordance with the rule—is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 79]

Getting up and leaving a meeting of the Community in the midst of a valid formal act—without having first given one’s consent to the act, and with the intention of invalidating it—is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 80]

After participating in a formal act of the Community giving robe-cloth to a Community official: Complaining that the Community acted out of favouritism is a
When the Community is dealing formally with an issue, the full Community must be present, as must all the individuals involved in the issue; the proceedings must follow the patterns set out in the Dhamma and Vinaya. [Adhikarana samatha 1]

If the Community unanimously believes that a bhikkhu is innocent of a charge made against him, they may declare him innocent on the basis of his memory of the events. [Adhikarana samatha 2]

If the Community unanimously believes that a bhikkhu was insane while committing offences against the rules, they may absolve him of any responsibility for the offences. [Adhikarana samatha 3]

If a bhikkhu commits an offence, he should willingly undergo the appropriate penalty in line with what he actually did and the actual seriousness of the offence. [Adhikarana samatha 4]

If an important dispute cannot be settled by a unanimous decision, it should be submitted to a vote. The opinion of the majority, if in accordance with the Dhamma and Vinaya, is then considered decisive. [Adhikarana samatha 5]
If a bhikkhu admits to an offence only after being interrogated in a formal meeting, the Community should carry out an act of censure against him, rescinding it only when he has mended his ways. [Adhikarana samatha 6]

If, in the course of a dispute, both sides act in ways unworthy of contemplatives, and the sorting out of the penalties would only prolong the dispute, the Community as a whole may make a blanket confession of its light offences. [Adhikarana samatha 7]

The Etiquette of a Contemplative

... Handing food or medicine to a mendicant ordained outside of Buddhism is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 41]

When on almsround with another bhikkhu: Sending him back so that he won’t witness any misconduct one is planning to indulge in is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 42]...

Watching a field army—or similar large military force—on active duty, unless there is a suitable reason, is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 48]

Staying more than three consecutive nights with an army on active duty—even when one has a suitable reason to be there—is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 49]
Going to a battlefield, a roll call, an array of the troops in battle formation or to see a review of the battle units while one is staying with an army is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 50]…

Tickling another bhikkhu is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 52]

Jumping and swimming in the water for fun is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 53]

Attempting to frighten another bhikkhu is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 55]

Lighting a fire to warm oneself—or having it lit—when one does not need the warmth for one’s health is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 56]

Bathing more frequently than once a fortnight when residing in the middle Ganges Valley, except on certain occasions, is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 57]

Hiding another bhikkhu’s bowl, robe, sitting cloth, needle case or belt—or having it hid—either as a joke or with the purpose of annoying him, is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 60]

Travelling by arrangement with a group of thieves from one village to another—knowing that they are thieves—is a pācittiya offence. [Pāc. 66]
Eating alms food

When eating, a bhikkhu should:

—eat his food methodically, from one side of the bowl to the other.
—eat bean curry only in proper proportion to the rice.
—level his rice before eating from it.
—refrain from throwing away—in an inhabited area—bowl-rinsing water that has grains of rice in it. [Sekhiya]
This appendix is for those people who are interested in the Pāli language and the pronunciation of the various Pāli words found in this book.

The Pāli alphabet is made up of forty-one letters. These are divided into eight vowels, thirty-two consonants, and one pure nasal sound called niggahita [the ŭ].

The Vowels

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Letter</th>
<th>As in</th>
<th>Vowel</th>
<th>As in</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>a</td>
<td>about</td>
<td>ā</td>
<td>father</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>i</td>
<td>hit</td>
<td>ī</td>
<td>machine</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>u</td>
<td>pull</td>
<td>ŭ</td>
<td>rule</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>e</td>
<td>grey</td>
<td>o</td>
<td>hole</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
The Consonants

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Consonant</th>
<th>Description</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>k</td>
<td>as in king</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>g</td>
<td>as in gone</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ŋ</td>
<td>as in sing</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c</td>
<td>as in ancient</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>j</td>
<td>as in joy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ŋ</td>
<td>as ny in canyon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ŋ</td>
<td>is (something like) a nasalized t</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ŋh</td>
<td>is an aspirated t</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ð</td>
<td>is (something like) a nasalized d</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ðh</td>
<td>is an aspirated d</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ŋ</td>
<td>is (something like) a nasalized n</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>t</td>
<td>as in stop</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>th</td>
<td>as in Thames (never as in the English the)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>d</td>
<td>as in dog</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dh</td>
<td>is an aspirated d</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>n</td>
<td>as in name</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
p  as in  spot
ph  as in  upholstery (never as in the English photo)
b  as in  bat bh  is an aspirated  b m  as in  mother
y  as in  yes  ay  as in  Aye!
r  as in  run
l  as in  long v  as  w  in  wine s  as in  sun
h  as in  hot l  as in  felt
m  as ng  in  sang

The dentals  t  and  d  are pronounced with the tip of the tongue placed against the front upper teeth.

The aspirates  kh ,  gh ,  th ,  dh ,  th ,  dh ,  ph ,  bh ,  are pronounced with an  h  sound immediately following; e.g., in blockhead, pighead, cat-head, log-head, etc., where the  h  in each is combined with the preceding consonant in pronunciation.
APPENDIX D
EXAMPLES OF VINAYA PRACTICE

This appendix illustrates how the bhikkhu’s rules are actually practised in different monasteries and communities. Each example is taken from the community’s own guide or from devotees’ experience.
A bhikkhu must have all eatables and drinkables (including medicines) except plain water, formally offered into his hands or placed on or into something in direct contact with his hands. In order to prevent contact with a woman, he will generally set down a cloth to receive things offered by a lady. … In the Forest Tradition of which our resident monks are a part, milk is considered to be a food, as are malted drinks such as Ovaltine and Milo, so none of these would be allowed outside the proper times.

In accordance with the discipline a bhikkhu is prohibited from eating fruit or vegetables containing fertile seeds. So when offering such things, a lay person can either remove the seeds, or make the fruit allowable by slightly damaging it with a knife. This is done by piercing the fruit and saying at the same time “kappiyam bhante” (meaning “I make this allowable, sir.”).
It is instructive to note that rather than limiting what can be offered, the Vinaya lays emphasis on the mode of offering. It regards the proper way of offering as being when the lay person approaches within a forearm’s distance of the bhikkhu, has a respectful manner (so for example, one would try to be lower than the bhikkhu) and is offering something that a bhikkhu can manage to carry(!). All this serves to make the act of offering a mindful and reflective one irrespective of what one is giving—and allows great joy to arise. …

Forest bhikkhus generally make their own robes from the cloth that is given. Plain white cotton is always useful (it can be dyed to the correct dull ochre) or worsted for the thicker robe (Sanghati). In a cold climate, the basic ‘triple robe’ of the Buddha is supplemented with sweaters, beanies, socks, etc., and these, of an appropriate brown colour, can also be offered. …

The bhikkhu’s precepts do not allow him to sleep more than three nights with an unordained male, and not even to lie down in the same room with a female. In providing a temporary room for a night one need not provide a great deal of furniture, a simple spare room that is private is adequate. …

A bhikkhu is allowed to use medicines if they are offered in the same way as food. Once offered, neither food nor medicine should be handled again by a lay person, as that renders it no longer allowable. Medicines can be considered as those things that are specifically for illness; those things that have a tonic or reviving quality (such as tea or sugar); and certain items which have a nutritional value in times of debilitation, hunger or fatigue (such as cheese, miso soup).

There are different limitations regarding the amount of time that a bhikkhu can store such ‘medicines’:

One day allowance: Filtered fruit juice (i.e. free of pulp) of any fruit smaller than an average fist. These juices are allowed to be received and drunk any time between one dawn and the dawn of the next day—this time-limit prevents the danger of fermentation.

Seven day allowance: Ghee, animal or vegetable oil, honey, any kind of sugar (including molasses) and cheese can be kept and consumed any time up to the dawn of the eighth day after which they were received.

‘Lifetime’ allowance: Pharmaceutical medicines, vitamins; plant roots such as ginger, ginseng; herbal decoctions such as camomile; beverages such as tea, coffee and cocoa. …

At no time does the monk request food. This principle should be borne in mind when offering food—rather than asking a monk what he would like, it is better to ask if you can offer some food. Considering that the meal will be the one meal of the day, offer what seems right recognizing that the bhikkhu will take what he needs and leave the rest. A good way to offer is to bring bowls of food to the bhikkhu and let him choose what he needs from each bowl.

One can also make an invitation, ‘pavarana’, to cover any circumstances that you might not be aware of—a health problem, need for a toothbrush, etc., by saying, “Bhante, if you are in need of any medicine or requisites, please let me know”. To avoid misunderstanding it is better to be quite specific, such as—“Bhante, if you need any more food…” “If you need a new pair of sandals…”. Unless specified an invitation can only be accepted for up to four months after which time it lapses unless renewed. Specifying the time limit, or giving some indication of the scope of the offering is good, in order to prevent misunderstanding—so that, for instance, when you are intending to offer some fruit juice, the bhikkhu doesn’t get the impression you want to buy a washing machine for the monastery! …

In practical terms, monasteries are financially controlled by lay stewards, who then make open invitation for the Sangha to ask for what they need, under the direction of the Abbot. So junior monks even have to ask an appointed agent (generally a senior bhikkhu or abbot) if they may take up the steward’s offer—to pay for dental treatment, obtain footwear or medicines, for example. This means that as far as is reasonably possible, the donations that are given to the stewards to support the Sangha are not wasted on unnecessary whims.

If a lay person wishes to give to a particular bhikkhu, but is uncertain of what he needs, he should make invitation. Any financial donations should not be made to ‘X Bhikkhu’ but to the stewards of the monastery, perhaps mentioning if it’s for a particular item or for the needs of a certain bhikkhu. For items such as travelling expenses, money can be given to an accompanying anagarika (dressed in white) or accompanying lay person, who can buy tickets, drinks for the journey, or anything else that the bhikkhu may need at that time. It is quite a good training for a lay person to actually consider what items are necessary, and offer those rather than money. …

Bhikkhus should have a male present who can understand what is being said when conversing with a lady, and a similar situation holds true for nuns. …

So to prevent such misunderstandings—however groundless—a bhikkhu has to be accompanied by a man whenever in the presence of a woman—on a journey or sitting alone in a secluded place (one would not call a meditation hall or a bus station a secluded place). Generally, bhikkhus would also refrain from carrying on correspondence with women, other than for matters pertaining to the monastery, travel arrangements, providing basic information, etc. When teaching Dhamma, even in a letter, it is easy for inspiration and compassion to turn into attachment. …

Accordingly for a Dhamma talk, it is good to set up a room where the teachings can be listened to with respect being shown to the speaker. In terms of etiquette—graceful conversation rather than rude—this means affording the speaker a seat that is higher than his audience, not pointing one’s feet at the speaker, removing headgear when listening to the talk, and not interrupting the speaker. Questions are welcome at the end of the talk.

Also as a sign of respect, when inviting a bhikkhu, it is usual for the person making the invitation to also make the travel arrangements—directly or indirectly. …

Lay people may be interested in applying [these] conventions [of etiquette] for their own training in sensitivity, but it should not be considered as something that is necessarily expected of them.

Firstly, there is the custom of bowing to the shrine or teacher. This is done when first entering their presence or when taking leave. Done gracefully at the appropriate time, this is a beautiful gesture that honours the person who does it; at an inappropriate time, done compulsively, it appears foolish. Another common gesture of respect is to place the hands so that the palms are touching, the fingers pointing upwards, and the hands held immediately in front of the chest. The gesture of raising the hands to the slightly lowered forehead is called ‘añjalī’. This is a pleasant means of greeting, bidding farewell, saluting the end of a Dhamma talk, concluding an offering.

Body language is something that is well understood in Asian countries. Apart from the obvious reminder to sit up for a Dhamma talk rather than loll or recline on the floor, one shows a manner of deference by ducking slightly if having to walk between a bhikkhu and the person he is speaking to. Similarly, one would not stand looming over a bhikkhu to talk to him or offer him something, but rather approach him at the level at which he is sitting.
Advice for Guests

... The Abbot is usually addressed as “Ajahn”, which comes from the Thai, and means “Teacher”. Other monks can be addressed as “Venerable”, or the Thai equivalent “Tahn”. These designations may or may not be followed by the ordained name of the individual. Alternatively, any monk can be called “Bhante”, a more general term. In this tradition it is considered impolite to refer to monks by their ordained names without the appropriate honorific preceding it. ...

The Precepts: The Community at Bodhinyanarama is bound by the monastic code of conduct, the basis of which is formalized into the following eight precepts:

2. Trustworthiness: not taking anything which is not given.
3. Chastity: refraining from any sexual activity.
4. Right Speech: avoiding false, abusive or malicious speech.
5. Sobriety: not taking any intoxicating drink or drug.

7. Restraint: refraining from attending games and shows, and from self-adornment. (Guests are asked to dress modestly, and not to play radios, musical tapes or instruments.)

8. Alertness: to refrain from overindulgence in sleep.

These are intended as a means of promoting harmony within the community and as a framework for contemplation. Guests are requested to undertake these precepts wholeheartedly for the insight they offer, and out of consideration for everyone else in the community. …

1. Take special care to dress and act with modesty (seventh precept). In a place where chastity is observed, it is fitting to tone down the attractive qualities of personal appearance and behaviour. When in the company of a monk, nun or novice, keep in mind that their discipline prohibits physical contact with members of the opposite sex.

2. The property of the monastery has come from someone’s generosity to the Sangha and guests are asked to treat it respectfully. Personal belongings should be kept tidy, particularly in spaces that are being used communally. If anything needs repair, replacing or refilling, please let the guest master know.

3. A monastery is a sanctuary from the usual worldly concerns, for those who have dedicated themselves to spiritual practice. As guests are sharing in this life as visitors, it is not appropriate to come and go without notice, or to engage in external business during their stay. ...
(3) Thailand: Wat Pah Nanachat

Observances[133]

... Laymen are expected to wear white or light coloured clothing during their stay... Men bathe at the wells and are asked not to bathe naked, but to use a bathing cloth or swimming trunks and not to walk bare chested in public areas of the Wat.

Women are expected to wear all white or white blouses and black skirts...

If talking with senior monks, particularly the teacher, find a convenient time and place. Senior monks should be addressed as “Ajahn”, others as “Tahn” and novices as “Nayn”. These designations may or may not be followed by the Pali name of the individual. It is considered impolite to refer to ordained people by their Pali names without the appropriate honorific preceding it. ...

Thai culture has an extensive etiquette and varied social customs—stemming largely from the monks’ Code of Discipline—governing many aspects of physical behaviour, comprising a form of rules for proper body language. Most apparent are the gestures of respect used within a monastic community which help to open the heart, compose the mind and encourage a sense of kindness to others. These forms of courtesy help to develop a sensitivity towards the others to whom one relates on a daily basis and reduce the number of upsets arising through inconsiderate or aggressive behaviour.

[Añjali] is a customary gesture used by Thais greeting others and also during the time one is speaking with a monk. Also known in Thai as the wai, it consists of raising the hands to the chest, palms together. The gesture is also used after offering something to or receiving something from an ordained person.

The formal bow or grahp is another frequently used formality, being an excellent means of expressing respect for the Buddha, Dhamma, Sangha and for cultivating humility. Always bow before sitting down in the sala, Bot or Abbot’s kuti. At the end of the meetings and when getting up either after the drink or from conversing with a monk, remember to bow three times. ...

In all postures try and be aware of where the body is in relation to a monk, especially if he is teaching Dhamma. When walking with a monk, it is customary for lay-people to walk a little behind, rather than immediately at his side. If a lay person has occasion to pass in front of a monk who is seated, it is polite to stoop.
If a monk is sitting, lay people should squat or sit down before addressing him; it is considered improper for lay people to be on a higher level when speaking with a monk. The Buddha instructed monks not to teach Dhamma to one who is unprepared or showing disrespect (allowances being made for those in poor health). When sitting and receiving a talk or conversing with a monk it is customary to sit in the pup-piap position—one leg bent in front, the other folded at the side. Sitting with the arms clasped around knees is improper. If sitting on a chair, sit attentively and erect. …

It is inappropriate to lie down in the sala or sit with one’s feet outstretched towards a Buddha image or monk. …

Be careful not to touch food or medicines already offered without first informing a monk. …

Eating should be done in silence and without a lot of scraping and banging of utensils or making unnecessary mess. One should not eat or drink standing up.

After midday, all members of the community should refrain from partaking of any food, including drinks containing milk, cereals, eggs, etc., or any kind of soup. There are certain ‘medicines’ allowable for consumption under the Vinaya. These include: fruit juice (uncooked and strained), soft drinks, butter and ghee, vegetable oil, honey and molasses (including sugar), tea, coffee, cocoa and herbal drinks. Such medicines are kept separately and offered as needed. …

Visitors should be aware of the proper mode of conduct for men and women within the setting of a forest monastery. They should be aware that some behaviour, quite acceptable and normal enough for foreigners, is open to misinterpretation by the Thai community, whose standards naturally differ.

Complete segregation of the sexes is mandatory at all times. No men should enter the women’s lodgings (or vice versa) without permission from the Abbot. If any contact is necessary, it should be done through the Abbot. Laymen should be careful in the kitchen not to get too close to laywomen, especially Thais.

Women are asked to be discreet and respectful when relating to monks, maintaining an even greater distance than with laymen. Take the Thai laywomen as examples in the proper way to behave with monks, such as perhaps kneeling down or squatting if conversing with a monk.

Women should be aware that it is an offence against his discipline if a monk touches a woman. If offering something to a monk either place it in his bowl or on his special receiving cloth—never directly into his hands. Male visitors should be aware that women with shaved heads may prefer not to hand anything to or receive anything directly from you. Put it down first and let the other person pick it up. Women must be careful entering rooms (such as the library) where a monk might be present; it is an offence for a monk to be alone with a woman in a closed room.
(4) Advice from a Western Woman Visiting a Thai Forest Monastery

“You will find [at the forest monastery] that locker space is provided for your food (you must not take anything edible out of the kitchen area) and there is usually a thermos of ice cubes, an ice box for perishables, there’s a shower room and toilet. You wash your clothes by the well pump—not from the rain water tanks! There is no electricity so you will need a torch and plenty of candles and a good lighter or matches.

Ask for a place to put your valuables in a ‘lock up’. You will be shown where you are to stay which is in a separate area of the monastery away from where the monks stay. However, please remember to dress suitably. The lay women on eight precepts wear white tops and black-wrap over skirts. If you are not going to keep the full eight it does not matter much what you wear as long as it is modest and the colours are muted.

You are provided with a mosquito net, blankets and pillow and pillow case. (But don’t just take anything until you are sure it has been made available to you.) I also take anti-mosquito cream, antiseptic wipes, bandaids, tissue, cold water washing powder, soap, prickly heat powder. Torch (flash light), ‘flip-flops (slip-on sandals), sleeping bag sheet, towel, and such like.

‘Allowables’ for the afternoon include: butterscotch, boiled sweets, dark chocolate, cheese, tea or coffee. (‘Ovaltine’, soy milk and coffee whiteners are not allowed in the afternoon at this Wat.)

It is customary to bow three times when one sees one’s teachers and when one goes to the main hall (sala). If you notice what the Thais do you will soon get the hang of it. You will probably feel rather lost for the first 24 hours but then with patience and mindfulness everything should come together. The Thais—and especially one’s teachers—are so good and generous to us that I feel it’s important not to offend them.

In the afternoon (or evening) there is usually a chance to listen to a Dhamma talk. In the morning one can prepare food to offer to the monks and to share with one’s fellow meditators. The rest of the day one can work out a meditation routine which suits one.

Most people make a donation—there is no charge at all—before they leave. Tan Acharn (the abbot) doesn’t like people to give more than they can afford. You must find out exactly how to do it.
—If you meet the monk in the shrine room or inside the house show your respect before you start your discussion. When you leave, please do the same.

—When the monk is giving a sermon, please do not interrupt until question time. Avoid walking in and out of the room while the sermon is in progress.

—Please do not engage in frivolous talk or shake hands with the monk. When speaking to the monk always be polite and never raise your voice.

—Do not point the feet or your back towards the monk. This is considered disrespectful.

—Unless you are serving a meal out of a dish, always offer anything with both hands. Do not leave it in front of a monk without offering it.

—Another person should always accompany a female person when going to see the monk. Even when providing transport for the monk a male person should always accompany a female person and the female person should not sit next to the monk.
—Lay people should not have their meals in front of the monk, and they should eat only after the monk has finished his meal.

—Please do not disturb the monk when he is resting or meditating. Please remember that monks also need to rest and therefore do not engage in lengthy discussions. Preferably, ask for permission before your discussion.

—Please do not run about inside the temple. Parents should ensure that children behave well. The temple is a sacred place and at all times people should behave in a calm and quiet manner.

—Please do not wear shoes, caps or hats inside the shrine room. If you are talking to the monk please remove your hat.

A Woman’s View

Standard of clothing for women: Clothes should not be too revealing such as shorts, miniskirt, low-cut or sleeveless garments.

Breast feeding is not appropriate in the presence of a monk or even in the same room.

It is not respectful to stretch out one’s legs when seated, or point them in the direction of the monk or Buddha Statue.
People should not stand and talk to a monk when he is seated.

The norms of good manners should be observed, e.g. people should not talk and laugh loudly or make a noise when the monk is talking to someone in the same room.

Women should not have a private conversation with a monk or be alone in the same room without a male person being present.
The Correct Things to do When Offering

General hints, Observances

A bhikkhu(s) should be approached respectfully by the person offering dāna, who should always try to maintain a bodily position lower than that of the bhikkhu.

The person making the offering should be shoeless, modestly dressed (see note below) and should have a generally respectful demeanour towards the bhikkhu(s).

As with any greeting or approach to a bhikkhu, the person offering dāna should pay respects in the normal way by bowing three times—one for each of the Triple Gem.

If in doubt as to how to proceed beyond this basic approach other experienced members of the lay community or the bhikkhu(s) themselves are sure to be able to offer helpful directions.
As a general rule, one does not speak to a bhikkhu while offering dāna, unless the bhikkhu initiates some conversation.

To move with mindfulness and perhaps a bit more slowly than usual lessens the likelihood of mishaps.

Remember, the best way of learning and of keeping out of potentially embarrassing situations is to seek guidance from others present or, if there is a language barrier, to follow the example of those around you. But remember, too, that rules for men and women are very different so make sure you are following the example of a member of the same gender!

It is very important for everyone to always maintain a respectful distance from the bhikkhus, the Sangha.

Offering food

The two most common situations for offering dāna in the form of food is when a line of bhikkhus is seated on a dais accepting dāna, or when a line of bhikkhus is on alms round (pindabat).
On the Dais

In this situation the lay person should join the line of people making offerings, if there is one. If they are offering singly, then the procedure is basically the same.

The person making the offering should kneel once they are sufficiently close enough to the bhikkhu(s), and signal their intent to offer food, drink, etc., by holding the item above them and to their forehead, at the same time mindfully recollecting the inner purpose for the offering.

The usual order is to offer plain cooked rice first, followed by other dishes. In this way a person may offer several times.

Food is placed with care into the alms bowl, beginning with the most senior bhikkhu and then proceeding down the line (usually from left to right when facing the seated line).

Once the offering has been made, the person should move back and away while still facing the bhikkhus and maintaining a low position. They might also, at this stage, repeat the respectful greeting of bowing three times.

It is very important to maintain a respectful distance and to place the food carefully and gently in the centre of the bowl without touching or interfering with it in any way.

After all the offerings have been made, the bhikkhus will chant and then have their meal.

When the bhikkhus have finished arranging their meal, it is usual for the most senior bhikkhu to lead the others in the blessing chanting for the lay community gathered. The most senior bhikkhu will then indicate that the lay people can now eat.

On Almsround

When offering food to a line of monks making an alms round, it is important to be well prepared and ready in position somewhere along their round before they arrive so as not to delay them on their round.

Wait quietly, using the time to reflect on the meaning of the action about to take place.

The food should be kept well off the ground and shoes should be removed in readiness.

When the bhikkhus are seen to be approaching, the person should kneel and hold the food above their head in an offering position and reflect on the meaning of the action about to take place.

Once the bhikkhu stops, the person should stand and place a portion of the food into the open alms bowl that the bhikkhu will be silently offering while maintaining a position lower than that of the bhikkhu (this is most easily achieved by slightly bending the knees and/or bending from the waist). If the bowl is full, the lid of the bowl might be offered.

It is very important to maintain a respectful distance and to place the food carefully and gently in the centre of the bowl without touching or interfering with it in any way.

Kneel again and repeat the procedure until dāna has been offered to all the bhikkhus.

Once the line moves away, it might be appropriate to pay respects in the usual way.

Offering dāna other than food

Women

When a lay woman wishes to offer a bhikkhu some kind of dāna other than food, (e.g. books, beverages, medicines) the first step is to approach the seated bhikkhu respectfully in the manner outlined above, pay respects, and let him know that you would like to make the offering, indicating exactly what the nature of the offering is. (In this way the bhikkhu can circumvent any inadvertently inappropriate offering.)

The bhikkhu will place down a piece of cloth and the person can then move forward and carefully place the offering on it.

The person should then pay respects again and move back a little. As with food offerings, shoes should be removed, and a low position in relation to the bhikkhu should be maintained.

Men

Lay men can follow the above procedure also, except that the item offered can be handed directly to the bhikkhu.

Ways of Relating to Monks

General

When visiting bhikkhus the lay person should pay respects to them in the usual way by bowing three times to each of the bhikkhus present in the order of their ordination if this is known.
The lay person can then assume a natural, comfortable seated position a little back from, and, if possible, lower than the bhikkhu. The only thing to remember here is that, if health permits, feet should be tucked under and away as it is not polite to point feet directly at a bhikkhu (or, in fact, any Thai person).

When addressing a bhikkhu it is usual to place both hands together at chest height when talking to him, or when he is replying—especially when he is expounding dhamma. Apart from indicating respect for the Sangha, this action helps with general mindfulness. If seeking advice or a dhamma explanation from a bhikkhu, a lay person would allow for spaciousness in a conversation, i.e. allow for pauses in the conversation before the bhikkhu speaks or replies.

Although tempting, it is a good idea not to get caught up in conversations about worldly matters with either the bhikkhus or with other lay people when sitting in the presence of the Sangha.

Lay women especially have to exercise great mindfulness when in the presence of the Sangha. If, for example, a lay woman finds herself left alone in the presence of a bhikkhu, e.g. other friends have moved away or left, the most appropriate thing to do is to pay respects to that bhikkhu and leave.
When walking in the company of bhikkhus lay people should walk a little behind, but still within speaking distance.

A lay person would not stand too close to a bhikkhu when he is standing. It is better to move a small distance away and assume a squatting position, if it feels comfortable to do this.

Paying respects

While not compulsory in any way, to pay respects in the traditional way to either a Buddha image or the Sangha is the most basic sign of a lay person’s respect for the Triple Gem. It is also an excellent exercise in mindfulness. To learn the correct and most graceful way to execute this action, it is usually easiest to follow the example of an experienced lay person or the bhikkhus themselves who also must pay respects to Buddha images or more senior bhikkhus.

Dress

When visiting a Wat or temple, it is good to be mindful about the type of clothing one wears—just as when going to a church or sacred building of any kind.

Dress for both men and women should be modest and unrevealing, and excessive ornamentation should be avoided.
Lay women especially should pay attention to what they wear, avoiding things like sheer fabrics; low necklines; sleeveless tops. Serious practitioners will consider not wearing perfume, make-up or jewellery as well.
1. Vinaya has been translated as ‘Discipline’ in the complete translation of six volumes (The Book of the Discipline) by the Pali Text Society. Literally it means leading away (‘discipline by leading away faults’) and covers the bhikkhu’s bodily and verbal actions as he extricates himself from suffering. (See also BA p.34)

2. In this work I have used bhikkhu and monk interchangeably.

3. See Appendix B for a summary of most of the other Pātimokkha Rules.

4. See Appendix A. See also An Introduction to Buddhism, pp. 196–212

5. Uposatha, see Appendix A

6. The Mahāparinibbāna Sutta (DN II, 156) reports that the Lord Buddha told Venerable Ānanda that the Sangha could abolish the minor rules after his Final Passing Away. However, the Council held soon afterwards decided that leaving well enough alone was safer and so did not change anything, mainly because Ven. Ānanda had failed to ask what these ‘minor rules’ were. This conservative approach right from the beginning enabled the original Teachings to be preserved.

(See also Beginnings: The Pali Suttas by Samanera Bodhesako, Wheel Publication No. 313–315)

7. “Buddhism is the world-renouncing religion par excellence and the source, one suspects, of all monasticism as it developed in other religions based on quite different ‘theological’ foundations, notably Christianity and Islam.” from Oxford professor R.C. Zaehner’s Foreword to The Origin and The Early Development of Buddhist Monachism.

8. Pāli is the ancient Indian language (akin to Sanskrit) in which all the Theravādin Buddhist Scriptures have been preserved. (See also Appendix C.)

9. “In the Buddha’s time, the style of clothing of one gone forth and that of a householder were very similar—a cloth around the waist and one across the shoulders… The only difference would be in the colour, that is, ochre for one gone forth.” (HS ch.8)

10. See Glossary.
11. He keeps the Eight Precepts, shaves his head and wears white robes.

12. These are the Guidelines that determine how a rule is applied under changed circumstances. See page 62.

13. Someone has calculated that at this time the most-distant Theravādin bhikkhus are in Iceland to the North and New Zealand to the South.

14. Sometimes this is on the weekly Observance Day (see Uposatha, Appendix A), sometimes when spending longer periods at a monastery. In some places this forms a preliminary stage to becoming a bhikkhu. For example, at some monasteries in England, a candidate usually has to live under Eight Precepts and wear white as an anagarika (homeless one) before he will be considered for ordination.

15. Samantapāsādikā I, 102; See Vinaya in Theravada Temples in the United States.

16. See OP pp.13–17

17. The Going-forth into the Homeless Life is sometimes rendered by the English word ‘ordination’. Whatever that word’s connotations, it is still an easy shorthand.

18. “One under 15 years of age, unless he can scare crows (i.e., is mature) should not be given the pabbajā for becoming a sāmaṇera (Vin.I,79). After receiving their parent’s consent (Vin.I,83), they were to shave their head and beard, put on the ochre robe and, paying respects to the bhikkhu, receive the Three Refuges and the Ten Training Precepts.”

(HP ch.19)

19. “To qualify for Acceptance a candidate must also have the necessary robes, bowl and a preceptor. When the Acceptance procedure was finalized, the candidate was formally asked if he was free of the various obstacles to qualification, … as well as being a human, a man, at least 20 years of age, having parent’s consent and complete as to robes and bowl. He was further asked to state his own name and that of his Preceptor.”

(HP ch.19)

20. OP pp.17–24

21. This is the Admonition (Anusāsana), which always includes an explanation of the four Offences of Defeat (sexual-intercourse, theft, murder and falsely claiming supernormal powers) together with the four supports or basic requisites (almsfood, robes made from thrown away cloth, lodging at the foot of a tree, medicine of fermented urine).

22. “… even though he has knowledge of Dhamma and Vinaya, yet it is not proper if he does not take [dependence] nissaya and live under the control of his [preceptor] or [teacher]. For him not to live in this way is prohibited by the Buddha.” (EV,II,p.52)

23. “He is one who has faith, shame, fear of evil, effort, and mindfulness; He is complete with moral precepts, good conduct, right view, deep learning and wisdom; He knows what is [an offence], what is not [an offence], what is a light [offence], what is a heavy [offence], and he has memorized correctly the Pāṭimokkha without any mistakes; He has five or more Rains.” (EV,II,p.53)

24. “He himself can nurse, or order to nurse, a sick [dependent monk]. He can put an end to, or seek another to put an end to, passion arisen in a [dependent monk] who is dissatisfied with the [holy life of a monk]. He can relieve boredom with the Dhamma-path which has arisen for a [dependent monk], or get another to do so. He knows [offences] and the ways out of [offences]; He can train a [dependent monk] in the highest training in proper conduct and give advice to [him] on the principal training in the pure life, the Buddha-law which is essential for the [holy life]. He can give progressive advice in the Dhamma and Vinaya. He can release a [dependent monk] from the wrong view by way of Dhamma; He has ten Rains or more than that.” (EV,II,p.53)

“It seems that these principles are not for the bhikkhu to consider for himself. It is for the consideration of his [preceptor] or teacher or of an Elder who is his senior, whether it is proper or not for a bhikkhu who lives with them to be released and to stay alone, and whether a bhikkhu who is released from [dependence] is able to be a [leader of an assembly of monks].” (See EV,II,pp.45–54)

25. For an interesting description of this aspect see Burmese Buddhist Culture.

26. This special leave of absence (sattāha) can only be taken in order to: visit or nurse ill Dhamma-friends and parents; support fellow bhikkhus who are thinking of disrobing; to attend to some essential duty of the Community; to support faithful lay devotees who make an invitation. (See EV,II,pp.84; 89–90)

27. Nowadays, there is much interest among women wanting to re-establish such a lineage but how to achieve this is problematic. Fortunately, there are places where women can practise the ‘Holy Life’ in robes as dasasīla mata nuns, developing the best way of Dhamma practice for themselves. (Dasasīla mata is a nun’s ordination based on the Ten Precepts.) For example: the Nuns Community, Amaravati Buddhist Monastery, Great Gaddesden, Nr. Hemel Hempstead, Herts HP1 3BZ, UK.(See also BA ch.VII)

28. “The Pāṭimokkha recitation on the Uposatha days thus would be the primary communal activity of the Buddhist Sangha, an occasion to meet together in communal confirmation of the standards of behaviour to which they were all committed.” (HS ch.20)

29. Note that anyone guilty of an offence of Defeat is automatically no longer a bhikkhu and therefore cannot take part in the Pātimokkha recitation.

30. “We are dealing primarily with rules, but rules are not the only way to express disciplinary norms, and the texts we are surveying express their norms in a variety of forms: as rules, principles, models, and virtues. The different forms are best suited for different purposes. Principles, models, and virtues are meant as personal, subjective standards and tend to be loosely defined. Their interpretation and application are left to the judgement of the individual. Rules are meant to serve as more objective standards. To work, they must be precisely defined in a way acceptable to the Community at large. The compilers of the Canon, recognizing this need, provided definitions for most of the terms in the rules, and the authors of the commentaries continued this task, carrying it out with even greater thoroughness.

“This need for precision, though, accounts for the weakness of rules in general as universal guides to behaviour. First, there is the question of where to draw the line between what is and is not an infraction of the rule. A clear break-off point is needed because rules—unlike principles—deal in two colours: black and white. In some cases, it is difficult to find a clear break-off point that corresponds exactly to one’s sense of what is right and wrong, and so it is necessary to include the areas of grey either with the white or the black. In general, but not always, the Vibhanga’s [text] position is to include the grey with the white, and to rely on the principles of the Dhamma to encourage the individual bhikkhu to stay away from the grey.”

(BMC pp.16–17)

31. The ‘defeated monk’ “does not need to go through a formal ceremony of disrobing because the act of violating the rule is an act of disrobing in and of itself. Even if he continues to pretend to be a bhikkhu, he does not really count as one; as soon as the facts are known, he must be expelled from the Sangha. He can never again properly ordain as a bhikkhu in this life. If he tries to ordain in a Community that does not know of his offence, his ordination does not count, and he must be expelled as soon as the truth is found out.

“The Commentary, however, states that such an offender may ‘go forth’ as a novice [if the Community accepts him].”

(BMC p.87)

“A bhikkhu who has committed any of the Four Pārājika offences can no longer have [communion] (saṃvāsa) with the sangha. He is one who is condemned for his entire lifetime. There is no way to remedy it. He must get out of the group. This is the only way for him. If that person does not give up his status on his own but declares himself a bhikkhu, once the sangha knows this, it should expel him from the group.”

(EV,III, pp.242–243)

32. “...he is put on probation for six days, during which time he is stripped of his seniority, is not trusted to go anywhere unaccompanied by four other monks of regular standing, and daily has to confess his offence to every monk who lives in or happens to visit the monastery. At the end of his probation, twenty monks have to be convened to reinstate him to his original status.”

(Introduction to the Patimokkha Rules; Penalties)

33. “There are six reasons why a bhikkhu commits an offence: lack of shame; he does not know that it is an offence; he is doubtful but still goes and does it; he thinks that he ought to do something when in fact he ought not; he thinks that he ought not to do something when in fact he ought to do it; he does something without thinking (absentmindedly).”

(Nv p.4)

34. “Another drawback resulting from the need for precision in rules is that the more precisely a rule is defined to suit a particular time and place, the less well it may fit in other times and places. The compilers of the Canon, in order to make up for this weakness, thus provided the origin stories and precedents to show the type of situation the rule was intended to prevent, providing principles and models that indicate the spirit of the rule and aid in applying it to different contexts.”

(BMC pp.15–18)

35. “Although the Vibhaṅga and Khandhakas [of the original Pāli texts] cover an enormous number of cases, they do not, of course, cover every possible contingency in the world; and from what we have seen of the way in which the Buddha formulated the rules—dealing with cases as they arose—there is reason to doubt that he himself wanted them to form an airtight system. As for cases that did not arise during his lifetime, he established … the Great Standards…—for judging cases not mentioned in the rules … “

(BMC p.26)

36. See Vinaya in Theravada Temples in the United States for a modern ‘sociological’ discussion of this point; while EV,I, pp.21–22 mentions the tendency to find ways around rules.

37. “This is especially true now that monasteries of different nationalities are taking root in close proximity to one another in the West. In the past, Thais, Burmese, and Sri Lankans could look down on one another’s traditions without danger of causing friction, as they lived in separate countries and spoke different languages. Now, however, we have become neighbours and have begun to speak common languages, so it is best that we take to heart the writings of the Chinese pilgrims who visited India centuries ago. They reported that even after the early Buddhists had split into 18 schools, each with its own Tripitaka [Canon] and Pāṭimokkha [Rule], and the Mahayanists had added their texts to the tradition, bhikkhus belonging to different schools could be found living together in the same monastery, practising and conducting communal business in peace and harmony. Theirs is a worthy example. We should not let our minor differences become stumbling blocks on our way....”

(BMC p.16)

38. asubha kammaṭṭhāna, see the Foundations of Mindfulness Sutta, (M,10)

39. “It is noteworthy that even praising death or assisting death out of compassion, that is, euthanasia, is still considered a Defeat for a bhikkhu (Vin.III,79;86).”

(HS ch.15)

40. For a discussion of the issues involved in caring for the terminally ill, see BMC pp.72–78.

41. Other examples of the ancient awareness of ‘not polluting the environment’ and hygiene are the two Sekhiya Training rules (Sekhiya 74, 75). These prohibit a bhikkhu from defecating, urinating or spitting into water or onto green vegetation.
42. Deva is a deity or heavenly being (lit: ‘radiant one’) of which there are many levels. However, all are still subject to repeated rebirth, old age and death. A tree deva is a deity that ‘lives’ in a tree.

43. “Confined is the household life, a path of dust; the going forth is open and spacious. Not easy is it living in a house to lead the religious life absolutely fulfilled and purified, as polished as mother-of-pearl. Suppose I were to shave off my hair and beard, clothe myself in ochre robes and go forth from homelife into homelessness?”

(HS ch.19)

44. “The Buddhist religious life aims at complete sexual (and sensual) purity and relinquishment of all sexual activity. It should be emphasized that this is not based merely upon a condemnation or denial of sexuality but a clear recognition and understanding of the nature and effects of sexuality. The Buddha exhorted his disciples to comprehend the gratification, danger and escape from sensual pleasures.”

(HS ch.13)

45. “…The word used for lustful intentions: (ottiṇṇa, lit. “possessed by”) is quite strong: ‘impassioned, full of desire, attracted heart’. Also used is vipariṇatena cittaṇa, lit. ‘a mind changed for the worst’, defined as ‘infatuated, corrupt, blinded’ (Vin.III,121). The Commentary defines this as a mind with lust (rāga). Thus, coming into unlustful physical contact with a female, such as accidentally hitting a woman’s hand during a food offering, or contact made while trying to get away from contact), is not a fault.” (HS ch.13)

46. “The Vinaya mentions cases of bhikkhus touching their mother, daughter and sister—that is, direct blood-relations—‘for affection’, and this was said to be, not a fault of Formal Meeting, but a Wrong-Doing (Vin.III,126).” (HS ch.13)

47. In full: “Should any bhikkhu, overcome by lust, with altered mind, speak in the presence of a woman in praise of ministering to his own sensuality thus: “This, sister, is the highest ministration, that of ministering to a virtuous, fine-natured follower of the celibate life such as myself with this act”—alluding to sexual intercourse—it entails initial and subsequent meetings of the Community.” (Sāgh. 4; BMC p.100)

48. “It is mainly as a result of this guideline that bhikkhus do not perform marriage ceremonies, that is, a bhikkhu should not in any way be instrumental in actually formalizing the relationship. There is, however, no fault in blessing the couple after they are formally married or in reconciling an undivorced couple who have separated (Vin.III.144).” (HS ch.13)

49. “trustworthy” is defined as one who is at least a Stream-enterer. However, even if the critic is an ‘ordinary person’ the Community may investigate the case if it sees
50. “The intention for privacy is most important in these instances, so if a bhikkhu unintentionally finds himself privately in a secluded or non-secluded place with a female or females, for instance, when all the other men depart from a room, or a bhikkhu enters a room of only females, there is no fault—but perhaps it wouldn’t be advisable to remain there too long. Technically, if the bhikkhu stands then there is no fault, however, even standing in a secluded place may give rise to suspicion, whatever the bhikkhu’s intentions might be. The best solution is to have another male present. Thus, a bhikkhu visiting lay-people is usually accompanied by another bhikkhu or a male attendant.” (HS ch.13)

51. According to the Commentary, if there are two women this rule is not broken. However, the rule about talking together would still apply. (See page 88.)

52. “A monk counselling a female disciple alone invites excessive intimacy and encourages rumour. If one is to speak more than a few sentences to a woman, one should always try to call another monk, novice or layman to come within hearing.” (AB)

Perhaps intimate and private telephone conversations should now also be included here. Some communities require that another monk be privy to what is going on, whether phone conversations or (over-familiarity) in letter writing:

“This guideline would also apply to telephone conversations but not to written communication, although careful reflection (and perhaps another bhikkhu’s guidance) should be exercised.”

(HS ch.13)

53. “The Explanation to this guideline defines Dhamma very literally as what is spoken by ‘the Buddha, his disciples, seers or celestial beings, connected with the goal, connected with Dhamma.’ It is thus technically no fault to speak to a woman in more than six sentences about any other topic, although suspicion may be aroused. Presumably, any conversation between a conscientious bhikkhu and a spiritually-aspiring woman would be only about Dhamma, various kinds of worldly topics were regarded as ‘animal talk’ and unworthy of a true samana.”

(HS ch.13)

54. However, another commentator does not think that a “block of flats or apartments” fits in with this interpretation, for it is really only concerned with buildings that are connected by porches and walkways in the Asian style. (See BMC pp.272–274)

55. See BMC pp.272–274
56. “The main emphasis in this guideline is upon the formal arranging, thus there is no fault if arrangements are made by someone else and a bhikkhu and a woman come to be travelling together, if the woman makes an arrangement and the bhikkhu, without consenting, goes along, or if there are misfortunes. However, other factors should be considered, i.e., a car is a private place (Pāc.45) and intimate conversations may occur (Pāc.7).”

(HS ch.13)

57. “…a bhikkhu should wish to use things which are plain and ordinary and not use the good things which are popular at the time and which can be called luxurious. …The plain and fine requisites should be used according to the time, but those which are made by or for himself should not aim at beauty, but should aim at usefulness or strength so that they can be used for a long time. When a bhikkhu understands this matter, he should practise in the middle way which is suitable for the time and place.”

(EV,II,pp.36–41)

“Bhikkhus who seek a living without violating the traditions of bhikkhus gain offerings in the right way. They should know how to make use of these offerings properly and not do anything with them which will make the donor’s faith decline.”

(EV,II,p.130)

58. This pavāraṇā should not be confused with the last day of the Rains Retreat, which is also called Pavāraṇā Day.

59. Pavāraṇā (Invitations) and their Origin Stories:

(i) The son of a great merchant was so inspired by Ven. Upananda’s Dhamma talk that he made an invitation of the four requisites, whereupon Ven. Upananda asked for one of the pieces of cloth that the lay man was actually wearing. The lay man replied that he would bring another cloth from home because walking around with only one cloth was not proper for him. Nevertheless, Ven. Upananda became very insistent so the lay man had to give up the cloth. People criticized the monks for being greedy and not being reasonable in their requests. The rule that resulted can be summarized:

“Asking for and receiving robe-material from an unrelated lay person, except when one’s robes have been stolen or destroyed, is [an offence of Confession with Forfeiture].”

(Nis. Pāc. 6; BMC p.189)

(ii) If he does beg and obtain the robe, he must forfeit it to another bhikkhu and confess the offence. When the circumstances are such that he is allowed to ask for a robe, he should not ask for more than two robes. This is covered by the next Rule:

“Asking for and receiving excess robe-material from unrelated lay people when one’s robes have been stolen or destroyed is [an offence of Confession with Forfeiture].”
(Summarized Nis. Pāc. 7; BMC p.192)

(iii) The Eighth Rule (Nissaggiya Pācittiya 8) arose because a bhikkhu overheard one of Ven. Upananda’s supporters saying that he intended to give Ven. Upananda a robe. The bhikkhu went and told Ven. Upananda, whereupon Ven. Upananda visited (without invitation) the ‘donor’ and specified exactly which kind of robe he wanted. The lay supporter commented, “these monks are insatiable and not easily contented. How can he, without having first been invited by me, make stipulations about a robe?”.

“When a lay person who is not a relative is planning to get a robe for one, but has yet to ask one what kind of robe one wants: Receiving the robe after making a request that would raise its cost is [an offence of Confession with Forfeiture.]”
(Summary: Nis. Pāc. 8; BMC p.195)

It is no offence for the bhikkhu to request them to reduce the amount they were planning to spend.

(iv) The twenty-sixth Confession with Forfeiture Rule:

“If a bhikkhu asks for thread from a lay person who is not a relative and who has not given [invitation] pavāraṇā and then has it woven into robe material by weavers, it is [an offence of Confession with Forfeiture].”

(Nis. Pāc. 26; Nv p.12)

(v) The twenty-seventh Confession with Forfeiture Rule:

“If a lay person, who is not a relative and who has not given [invitation] pavāraṇā, should order weavers to make up some material for a robe for the bhikkhu, if then the bhikkhu instructs the weavers saying that if they make it better than they otherwise would have done he will give them some reward, it is [an offence of Confession with Forfeiture.]”

(Nis. Pāc. 27; Nv p.12)

Although these Rules are about robe-material, conscientious bhikkhus would regard other requisites in the same spirit.

60. In modern Thailand, a person can offer support by giving a printed slip which may read: “I invite you with the Four Requisites equal in amount to the value of ‘x-amount’ that has been handed over already to the steward. As you have need of it, please request it from the steward.”

61. In Thailand, the iron bowl has been almost superseded by the bowl made from stainless steel. EV reports that a medium-sized bowl is about 22.5 cm. in diameter. (See BMC p.231)
62. After being ten days unrepaired, the robe is considered forfeit (Nis. Pāc.). (‘A stitch in time saves nine!’)

63. “Allowable items (i.e., knives and thimbles) were not to be made of expensive things but only of bone, ivory, horn, reed, bamboo, wood, shellac, fruit, copper or conch-shell. These materials were also permitted for a variety of minor articles such as an ointment-box, ointment-stick, nose-spoon, steam-tubes, earwax remover, belt-buckles and loops and tags for robes. Also, bags, with a strap and string for tying them closed, were allowed for most of the above-mentioned articles as well as for medicines and sandals.” (HS ch.12)

64. “…things which are given by donors to a bhikkhu to be his own, or a bhikkhu has [properly acquired] as his personal possessions. Even things which the sangha has distributed, their ownership is given to a bhikkhu and they are personal things. A bhikkhu who is the owner of such things has the right to give them up, or to give them away, just as he likes. The point here is that one should not cause the faith of the donor to decline.” (EV,II,p.149)

“to distribute things among fellow Dhamma-friends is suitable as well as giving to laymen who work in the monastery, or those who help with a bhikkhu’s work. They should be given to such people as the cost of food and as the cost of labour, or they should be given the things which a bhikkhu has received so that they can be used and not wasted, for this will be proper.” (EV,II,p.130)

However: “…telling a lay person to take one’s belongings as his/her own is a “theft of faith” (saddhā-deyya)—i.e. a misuse of the donations that lay supporters have sacrificed for the bhikkhu’s use.” (BMC p.229)

65. The ‘discarded cloth’ would be thoroughly washed and possibly bleached before it could be dyed. Nowadays robes made this way are rare and probably used only by a few forest monks. He gave this reflection:

“Properly considering the robe, I use it: simply to ward off cold, to ward off heat, to ward off the touch of flies, mosquitoes, simply for the purpose of covering the parts of the body which cause shame.” [OP p.46; (Pāli: M. I, 10; A. III, 387)]

66. “In the Buddha’s time, the style of clothing of one gone forth and that of a householder were very similar—a cloth around the waist and one across the shoulders. Thus at Vin.III,211, Venerable Upananda asks for the upper cloth from the son of a rich merchant). The only difference would be in the colour, that is, ochre for one gone forth.” (HS ch.8)

67. There is some uncertainty as to the maximum size allowed. (See BMC p.528)
Also, cloth now is not such a luxury and humans nowadays seem to be physically bigger; so robes can now be found as large as 3 x 2 metres for the upper and outer robes, 2.5 x 1 metre for the skirt robe.

Though five panels are shown in this figure, there can be seven, nine, or more (usually an odd number) depending on the size of the cloth.

68. “Variously translated: Pali English Dictionary page 212 says ‘a kind of brown, i.e., yellow’; Childers (p.190) has ‘reddish yellow, yellow’; Upasak (p.70) says ‘yellow reddish colour’. Present day renunciants in India wear orange-coloured clothing. Perhaps ‘ochre’ would be a good translation. In Thailand robes vary in colour from bright orange to reddish-brown for the city- and village-dwelling monks to tan through chocolate-brown for the forest-dwelling monks.” (HS Endnotes)

In Thailand this colour is considered to be “yellow mixed with much red or the ochre yellow which is the colour obtained from the heartwood of the Jack-fruit tree.” (EV,II,pp.15–17) The heartwood of the jack-fruit tree (Artocarpus integrifolia (Urticaceae)) is now difficult to find due to deforestation.

69. For example, in Thailand the double-thickness outer robe is often ‘ceremonially’ folded over the left shoulder; in Burma the upper robe sometime reaches high up the neck. And the method of wearing and rolling the robe-edges will differ from community to community.

70. The Sekhiya Training Rules require that a bhikkhu be properly covered from the neck to the knees and that the robe be ‘even all around’. See page 172.

71. e.g. a bathing cloth, handkerchief, towel, etc. In Thailand, it has become accepted practice for a monk always to wear a ‘shoulder cloth’ (angsa) under his robe. While working in the monastery he may then put his upper robe aside. In western countries with harsh winters an extra ‘under-robe’, with socks, gloves, etc., are often worn for added warmth.

72. The original allowance came about: “When a group of thirty ascetic bhikkhus braved rain and floods to visit the Buddha and arrived at his residence drenched and weary, the Buddha made the allowance for bhikkhus who have kept the Rains Residence to conduct a Kathina ceremony.” (HS ch.21)

73. He gave this reflection: “Properly considering almsfood, I use it: not playfully, nor for intoxication, nor for putting on weight, nor for beautification; but simply for the survival and continuance of this body, for ending its afflictions, for the support of the chaste life, (thinking) I will destroy old feelings (of hunger) and not create new feelings (from overeating). Thus I will maintain myself, be blameless, and live in comfort.”

[OP p.46; (Pāli: M. I, 10; A. III, 387)]

74. The bhikkhu may also voluntarily undertake the special dhutanga (tudong in Thai) practices. These are more usually seen among forest monks and are distinctive of their way of practice. For example, they always try to go on alms round; they eat the collected food out of their alms bowl in one sitting; and may refuse late-come food. (See also dhutanga in the Glossary.)

75. See BMC pages 495–504. The following translations are based on this. Breaking a Sekhiya is usually considered an offence of wrong-doing.

76. “This rule teaches bhikkhus to show their appreciation of the donors, for they should not look down on them, while they should show their appreciation of the food given to them. They should not behave in such a way (as to suggest that) they are accepting it to play with it or throw it away later.”

(EV, I, p.210)

77. When the Buddhist Community comes together to celebrate a festival day, it can show its harmony and common purpose through the alms round. The bhikkhu carries the ‘bowl of the Buddha’ and all the lay people, young and old, join in putting a token amount of rice or food into the bowl. The abundant food is usually afterwards shared out among everyone present.

78. Nowadays, bhikkhus often use plates and cutlery. However, forest bhikkhus will usually keep to the old traditions—which is also part of the dhutanga practices. The practice of eating out of the bowl using one’s fingers is still found in Sri Lanka.

79. See the Silavagga of the Dīgha Nikāya.

80. Noon or midday is when the sun is at its zenith or highest elevation in the sky, midway between sunrise and sunset (on a plain). It is not necessarily 12:00 hours clock time because the clocks are often changed depending on the season and whether ‘Daylight Saving’ is in force. However, many communities will keep to twelve noon as the set time limit.

81. However, there is “an allowance in the Mahāvagga (I.14.7) for a bhikkhu who has taken a purgative to take strained meat broth, strained rice broth, or strained green gram (mung bean) broth at any time of the day. Using the Great Standards, we may say that a bhikkhu who has a similar illness or worse may take these broths at any time; and some have argued that other bean broths—such as soybean milk—would fit under the category of green gram broth as well. However, unlike the case with the five tonics, mere hunger or fatigue would not seem to count as sufficient reasons for taking any of these substances in the ‘wrong time.’ … some have argued, using the Great Standards, that the special allowance for this substance [—Ionasoviraka, which is not now made—] should extend to miso as well, but this is a controversial point.”

“Certain other ‘medicines’ may be interpreted by applying the Great Standards … from some of those mentioned specifically in the Vinaya. Thus soya-bean milk may be a form of ‘thin mung-bean broth’ …, miso may be a form of “salted sour gruel” …”

82. Note that the Buddha otherwise allowed and praised living in a charnel ground and wearing rag-robles, for these are two of the dhutaṅga practices.

83. Water and tooth-cleaning sticks are excepted in the rule. Some Communities also count toothpaste under this exception, some consider it more a medicine and therefore require it to be properly offered. While some Communities require ice, hot water, and bottled water to be also offered—some do not.

84. Please note, however, that the spoon should not be knocked on the side of the bowl to clear off any remaining rice. Because the bowl is traditionally clay or iron, it easily is damaged and there are several rules which remind the bhikkhu to look after his bowl. If his bowl does become cracked, he is not allowed to ask for another until it is unusable.

(Nis. Pāc.22)

85. Bhikkhus in Thailand never receive food from women directly into their hands. It is always offered into their bowl or onto a ‘receiving-cloth.’ This practice does not appear directly in the texts. However, it probably functions as extra-assurance for the monks concerning the very serious rule about touching women (see page 79) Many Thai eight-precept nuns follow a reciprocal tradition when receiving anything from a man. In Sri Lanka and Burma monks generally will accept offerings from women directly into their hands.

86. The Commentary allows a lay person or novice to collect anything remaining from the bhikkhu’s meal and keep it in the approved storeroom. As long as the bhikkhu has completely abandoned all possession of that food, a lay person or novice may, on their own initiative, re-offer it the following day and the bhikkhu may accept and eat the food. However, many Communities ignore this allowance because of concern that it will be abused so they will not receive food that has previously been offered.

87. A Snack (of ‘non-staple’ food) is not included in this rule, however the bhikkhu should not overeat so that it spoils his appetite. Also the original donor may provide the pre-meal snack or give permission to eat breakfast beforehand.

88. “There are approximately 26 references to the eating of meat by bhikkhus and bhikkhunīs (and 4 to meat-broth), 10 of these are in reference to the five kinds of staple food (bhojana). Many of these references are quite incidental, for example, a chief minister offers each of 1250 bhikkhus a bowl of meat (Vin.I,222), a bhikkhu steals a bowlful of meat during a famine (Vin.III,59) and bhikkhus eat the remains of a lion’s kill (Vin.III,80). One of these references concerns the Buddha’s refusal to forbid the eating of fish and meat as proposed by the schismatic Bhikkhu Devadatta (Vin.II,197; III,172). The Buddha rather reiterated his position that fish and meat were pure if not seen, heard or suspected to have been killed for a bhikkhu. It thus seems certain that meat-eating was common in the Buddha’s time and only later, with the growth of the Mahayana schools, became prohibited.

A study of the allowance to eat meat pure in the three respects in other Vinaya recensions shows that, despite minor differences in defining terms, there is not “any material difference in the meaning and scope of the rule.” It has been suggested that the development of vegetarianism amongst certain Mahayanists may have close connexions to the theory of the tathāgatagarbha…” (HS ch.9)

However, another commentator notes that Tibetan Buddhists—who also follow the Mahayana (and the tathāgatagarbha teachings)—do eat meat. He suggests that not eating meat came more from the Taoist influence in China.

89. This exception was made when the newly converted (from the Jains) General Siha ordered that a meal for the Lord Buddha and his monks be prepared for the next day with meat from the market. The Jains then started to shout and complain all over town in an attempt to discredit the Buddha.

The bhikkhu should also not eat raw or undercooked meat, or the flesh of elephants, horses, dogs, snakes, lions, tigers, leopards, bears, hyenas or, of course, human flesh.

90. “The flesh of animals which have been slaughtered to sell as meat for the people, however, is called ‘flesh which exists already’. [It] has been slaughtered for their meat to be used for food by one person or by a group of people, apart from fellow Dhamma friends, or specially for the butcher himself … If people cook such meat and offer it to a bhikkhu, [it] will not be an offence to accept and eat it.” (EV,II,pp.131–133)

91. Lay people had complained to the Lord Buddha about the monks destroying ‘seed-life’, therefore He set down that the monks were to check with the lay people first to know if eating those particular fruits was considered allowable.

92. Eight varieties are mentioned in the Pāli: mango-juice, roseapple-juice, juice from two types of bananas, ‘honey tree’-juice, persimmon or grape-juice, lotus-root juice, marian-plum or lychee-juice.

93. The traditional way of making these juices is that “the ripe fruit should be peeled or cut open and the flesh removed and bound up in a cloth and then squeezed hard so that the juice comes out, leaving the (remains of the) flesh in the cloth, after which sufficient water should be added, mixing in other things such as sugar or salt to taste. Other [than for the ‘honey tree juice’, water need not be added]. The fruit should be fresh and it is prohibited to cook it over a fire.” (EV,II,p.137)

94. For example, Plain chocolate (sugar+vegetable oil + cocoa) is allowable in some places but not milk chocolate. Milk is considered to be food.

One of the tonic-medicines is called navanītam in Pāli. Some communities consider that it is butter and some cheese. It is a controversial point. Remembering that each local community of monks may practise differently, the lay person will need to check what is considered allowable.

Other comments on the tonic-medicines:

“Some say that navanītam is butter, some say that it is cheese. However, there is a reasonable argument following the Buddha’s Four Great Standards (Mahāvagga, chapter 6 verse 40) to state that butter and cheese are sufficiently similar to the real navanītaṁ and dissimilar to what has been disallowed by the Buddha to make both butter and cheese also allowable, along with navanītaṁ as one of the Five Tonics. In the West, cheese is sometimes considered as a food and monks seen eating it in the afternoon or evening may be looked down upon by some lay people. It seems better in such situations, only to make use of the allowance to eat cheese in the afternoon or evening when there is more than mere tiredness but a debilitating illness instead.

“…It may be that the [tonic-] medicine is given up, with no expectation of its return, before seven days have passed; in which case if, without any prompting by the monk, it should be offered again that medicine may be accepted and kept a further seven days.”

(AB)

“These five medicines are defined as:

1) sappi: ghee, clarified butter, a fine oil used in Indian cooking; obtained from processing the milk of cows, goats, buffaloes or any other animal whose flesh is allowed;

2) navanīta: fresh butter/cheese* made from the milk of any animal whose flesh is allowed;
3) telam: oil, either vegetable or animal;

4) madhu: honey from bees;

5) phāṇita: sugar, often translated as “molasses”, however this seems a quite limited definition; while sugar-cane is specifically mentioned, it seems that all kinds of sugar are meant. Sugar-cane was probably the original source of sugar and it would have been in quite a raw state much like the jaggery of Sri Lanka and the ‘num oy’ of Thailand. (HS ch.10)

”Made from churning curds … This is similar to modern-day creamery butter and, since cheese is also processed from curds, many bhikkhus would include cheese under this name as well (in Thailand the name for butter and cheese is the same—butter is the ‘soft’ variety and cheese the ‘hard’). One complication with this is that in the West cheese is considered a substantial food. Thus, if used as a tonic should be taken in moderation.” (HS Endnotes)

”Under this would be included ‘sugar-water’ and so many communities would allow ‘lemonade’ and other soft drinks.” (HS Endnotes)

95. “…the numerous modern-day chemical medicines are different forms of roots, resins and salts (lifetime medicines). Perhaps the most important criteria to determine what is a medicine and in using medicines is one’s intention, that is, to reflect on why it is being used: is it being used as a food or for the relief of dis-ease or discomfort?” (HS ch.10)

96. In some communities plain tea, coffee, cocoa, etc. would be included here.

97. See also [Etiquette], and EN 124.

98. It would seem that in order to treat other substances in the same way as alcohol, they should significantly distort or impair one’s mindfulness. (As in the Fifth Precept.) Smoking cigarettes, drinking coffee or tea would therefore not normally be included in this rule. However, as lay people are the ones that supply such things, they can decide for themselves what items they consider appropriate to give to bhikkhus. (Certain communities may decide some of these items are ‘unhealthy’ or ‘addictive’ and therefore not allow them.)

99. “There is no mention in the Pali Canon of any other of the many intoxicating substances which are known today. However, applying the Great Standards, it seems appropriate to include within this guideline all strong mood-altering substances, for example, narcotics, hallucinogenics, amphetamines, sedatives, etc. The main thrust of this guideline is not to just refrain from liquor, but rather to refrain from all substances which cause heedlessness, mental confusion and disorientation. In our modern-day, pill-popping society it may be hard to appreciate the real value of this particular guideline. However, for those serious about the cultivation of mind through meditation exercises, one’s ordinary confusion is quite enough to deal with—not to mention compounding it with powerful foreign substances.” (HS.ch.17)

100. “Attempts to precisely define this guideline have given rise to differing views, for the most part due to the two different definitions of what technically constitutes stealing resulting in loss of bhikkhu status (i.e., gross stealing). The wording of the guideline gives the standard that a person caught stealing would be punished by the civil authorities: ‘beaten, imprisoned or banished’. The Explanation then defines this degree of stealing as taking anything worth at least one pāda, a certain standard of value in India at that time.

“The first standard is somewhat ambiguous and relative to social values at different places and at different times. The second is more specific—if one knows how much a pāda is worth! A sub-commentary, says that one pāda is equal to the value of gold weighing 20 unhusked rice-grains. This has been determined as approximately 1/24 oz. troy of gold. Of course, it must also be recognized that the price of gold fluctuates over time. This seems like a reasonable amount to constitute a theft serious enough to warrant Defeat.”

101. “In the present time this may also include such things as breach of copyright, inappropriate use of public utilities (telephone, post, etc.) or transportation systems (travelling without the correct ticket), having money changed on the black market, illegal entry into countries (not paying for visa), etc., etc.,” (HS Endnote)

102. “The non-acceptance of money has always been one of the fundamental observances of those who have left the world. Money is the measure of wealth and to most people material wealth is the goal of life. In the bhikkhu’s renunciation of money he emphatically demonstrates his complete rejection of worldly pursuits. At one stroke he sets himself significantly apart from the vast majority of people and becomes a constant reminder to all that a life based on the struggle to accumulate money is not the only way to live. Through giving up money he gives up much of his power to manipulate the world and to satisfy his desires. Thus, as the Buddha said in the Samyutta Nikāya:

“Whoever agrees to gold or money, headman, also agrees to the five strands of sensual pleasure, and whoever agrees to the five strands of sensual pleasure, headman, you may take for certain that this is not the way of a recluse, that this is not the way of a Buddhist monk.” (See P.T.S. Kindred Sayings, Vol. 4 p.232)
“A Bhikkhu who does not accept money inspires great faith in Buddhism amongst the laity; according to the following quote he is likened unto a ‘shining example’—whereas the bhikkhu who does accept money is likened unto a ‘blemish’ or ‘stain’:

“Bhikkhus, … there are these four stains because of which samanas and brahmins glow not, shine not, blaze not. What are these four? Drinking alcoholic beverages … indulging in sexual intercourse … accepting gold and money … obtaining requisites through a wrong mode of livelihood.” (A.II.53)”

“In the act of accepting money, or having it accepted in one’s name, one is accepting all the cares, responsibilities, and dangers that come with its ownership; in the act of arranging a trade, one is accepting responsibility for the fairness of the trade: that it undervalues neither the generosity of the person who donated the money, nor the goods and services of the person receiving the money in exchange.” (BMC p.197)

103. “The question of whether or not it is best to express one’s refusal outwardly lies beyond the scope of the Vinaya, and often depends on the situation. Ideally, one should inform the donor so that he or she will know enough not to present such gifts in the future, but there are also cases where the donor is still new to the idea of rules and will simply be offended if the bhikkhu objects to what he or she means as a well-intentioned gesture. This is thus a matter where a bhikkhu should use his discretion.”

(BMC p.218)

104. “Bhikkhus may receive cheques made out in their name (which are then endorsed and given to the steward) and can make use of such things as telephone cards, transportation tickets and vouchers for specific items (i.e., food, drinks, books, etc.).”

(HS ch.14)

105. “The Buddha had to steer a middle course between honouring the laity’s generosity and concern for the welfare of the Bhikkhu-Sangha and preventing the bhikkhus from receiving and using money. Thus, while bhikkhus are not allowed to receive money for their use, they are allowed to accept things obtained from a properly-deposited fund. This is usually done through the services of a monastery-steward who is entrusted with money provided by lay people. In our modern, money-dominated world this may appear as a subtle and refined point, however, it may be helpful to compare this arrangement to a special Trust Fund from which the beneficiaries (in this case, bhikkhus) can only receive material requisites. That is, the donor (temporarily) establishes a Trust Fund to provide a bhikkhu with requisites through the monastery-steward as manager.”

(HS ch.14)

“…the Buddha permitted money to be entrusted by a donor to a steward, who may be a monastery attendant or a lay follower, for the personal benefit of an individual bhikkhu, thus:

“There are, bhikkhus, people of faith and confidence (in the Sangha) who entrust money into the hands of monastery stewards saying, “With this, provide the bhikkhu so-and-so with what is allowable”. I permit you, bhikkhus, to accept an allowable item obtained thereby. But this, bhikkhus, I do not say: that in any circumstances may gold, silver or money be accepted (by a bhikkhu, or) be looked about for (by him)”.

“When the donors ask the bhikkhu, ‘Has the Venerable One a steward?’ or, ‘Is there an appropriate place where I may deposit this money’, or some similar question, then the bhikkhu may point out a suitable steward, or he may indicate an appropriate place. Should the donor deposit the money with that steward, or in that place, then it is properly deposited.”

106. “Money given to a steward of the Sangha (veyyāvaccakara), for the use of bhikkhus or to stewards of individual bhikkhus, is not given to the bhikkhus for them to possess. The steward holds the money of the donors in trust, and should a bhikkhu have legitimate reason to make use of this (travel for Dhamma, Requisites, Dhamma-books, etc.), he can request the steward to supply him with the article needed. He cannot purchase it himself. “This rule concerns money of which a bhikkhu has such thoughts as, ‘It is mine’ or ‘It belongs to me’ and which he intends to use for purposes other than those of Dhamma.”

(Pāt. 1966 Ed.; p104–105)

107. “The Monastery-Steward: The monastery-steward is usually someone who is a close supporter of the monastery. Not only should he/she ideally be well-informed about the monastic guidelines relating to money, but also be knowledgeable about what is appropriate to provide and the proper procedures for doing so.

“When a fund has been properly established and the bhikkhu is in need of a requisite, he may approach that steward and state what he is in need of. Should a bhikkhu command the steward to: ‘Buy me this’, it is considered a case of dubbhicaritata (wrong procedure) and that bhikkhu may not make use of any article obtained therefrom, although other bhikkhus may use it.

“It is a fault of Acknowledgement with Forfeiture [Nis. Pāc.10] for a bhikkhu who receives a requisite by badgering the steward beyond verbally reminding him three times and standing silently up to six times. If the required requisite is not forthcoming the bhikkhu is obliged to inform the donor that the invitation to requisites has not been fulfilled. The Commentary says that if the bhikkhu does not inform the donor it is a fault of Wrong-Doing “for breaking a custom”). The donor may then take up the matter with the steward.”

“A bhikkhu may not command (tell) either the donor or the steward what to do with regard to the gift of gold or money. However, he may give them hints, or suggestions, or any information, as long as these fall short of ordering the donor or steward. Also, a bhikkhu may not accept the ownership of gold or money offered to him indirectly, for example should a donor say to him, “In such and such a place is a certain amount of money, I give it to you.” then the bhikkhu is obliged to reject the gift by words or by a gesture of refusal or by mental resolve (e.g. determining, “I do not accept this”) otherwise he incurs [an offence of Confession with Forfeiture].”

108. “Bhikkhu Brahmawangso has ‘buying and selling using money’; Ms. Horner has: ‘transactions in which gold and silver is used’, BD.2,106; Thanissaro Bhikkhu has ‘monetary exchange’, BMC, 220 and details the differing views of the Vinaya and Commentary and the variety of faults arising from various transactions. The Vinaya only outlines the procedure for forfeiting gold and money as a result of this action so this guideline seems to apply only to exchanging gold or money and selling for money.”

109. The list also mentions: women, articles of women’s dress, and representations of women; various kinds of weapons; instruments for trapping animals; all kinds of musical instruments. (See EV,II,p.73)

110. He gave this reflection: “Properly considering the lodging, I use it: simply to ward off cold, to ward off heat, to ward off the touch of flies, mosquitoes, wind, sun and reptiles; simply for protection from the inclemencies of weather and for the enjoyment of seclusion.” [OP p.46; (Pāli: M. I, 10; A. III, 387)]

111. “Thus, bhikkhus were required to enter the rains-residence in some kind of lodging, not doing so was a fault of Wrong-doing (Vin.I,152).” (HS ch.21)

112. Divination, casting spells, mediumship, giving protective charms, exorcism, fortune telling, astrology, ghost-lore, etc., are classed as ‘low animal-like knowledge’ (see Wrong Ways of Behaviour, page 179) and do not come under this rule.

113. According to the Commentary, an insane monk is one who “goes about in an unseemly way, with deranged perceptions, having cast away all sense of conscience and shame, not knowing whether he has transgressed major or minor training rules” (See BMC p.49)

There are monks who are not insane but who believe in their own delusions of grandeur. They are not exempt from offences.
114. The Buddha did make a special allowance about footwear for ‘outlying border regions’. In some western countries going barefooted would not be socially acceptable and might even be against the local bye-laws. The Great Standards should be used to decide what is suitable.

115. “The Buddha encouraged reasonable standards of cleanliness, nutrition and treatment of illness. He readily accepted the physician Jivaka’s suggestion to allow bhikkhus a place to do walking meditation and a sweat-room to relieve bad health caused by eating rich meals. He even established very high standards for the time by having the bhikkhus build communal toilets and communal bathing-places. However, when people with various diseases sought to benefit from the Sangha’s high standards of care and attention to the sick, they were disallowed from [becoming bhikkhus], as were people who had various deformities. Thus, bhikkhus should not become doctors, full-time nurses or attendants to invalids. They were supposed to live a simple, unencumbered life sustained by sufficient nutriment, appropriate medicines and advanced health standards for the full-time pursuit of spiritual liberation.”

“When the Buddha referred to tending the sick, he was referring to fellow monastics. The Commentary, … [has that] a bhikkhu may prescribe and supply medicine to … his parents, to those caring for his parents, to lay-attendants of the monastery and to those residing in the monastery preparing to ordain; a bhikkhu may also prescribe (but not supply) medicines for brothers, sisters, aunts, uncles and grandparents, if they are not able to supply their own medicines, a bhikkhu can loan these to them; if travellers, bandits, wounded soldiers, important people and those with no relatives come to the monastery for help, they should be given medicine without reimbursement; medicine may be given indirectly to brothers- and sisters-in-law, either through their children or through the bhikkhu’s brother or sister; monastery supporters and faithful people may be helped by mentioning what medicines will cure their particular ailment; prescribing or supplying beyond this is a Wrong-doing.” (HS ch.10)

116. “The term ‘corrupter of families’ is one way of speech used by a group of bhikkhus. It does not mean that a bhikkhu gets angry, takes revenge, injures or destroys another’s wealth. The meaning is that a bhikkhu flatters by behaving as a layman, or by serving lay people, or by hoping for gains, giving a little to get much. Doing this a bhikkhu is called a corrupter of families because he makes lay people decline in faith which is the cause for the possession of skilfulness. Although a bhikkhu behaving in that way may please some laymen, yet they will not respect him as a bhikkhu, only treating him as an inferior friend. The term ‘of bad behaviour’, refers to behaviour beyond the bounds of a [recluse’s] conduct, for instance, playfully associating with girls in a family, or playing games, naughtiness or joking, singing and dancing.” (Pāt. 1969 Ed., p.157)

117. “They indulged in many kinds of bad behaviour such as cultivating flowering trees, making them into garlands and sending them to women and girls of respectable families; eating and socializing with women and girls of respectable families; eating after noon; drinking intoxicants; dancing, singing and playing musical instruments; playing various games; training in elephant, horse and cart knowledge; training in archery and swordsmanship; wrestling and fighting; applauding dancing girls; etc.” (HS ch.17)

118. See Banner of the Arahants, Ch. V.

119. There is an example from an ancient Sri Lankan inscription commemorating the king’s gift of silk robes to the Pamsakulika monks. As this title indicated that they were rag-robe wearers, it is ironic that they found themselves with royal silk robes.

120. “…there is the custom of bowing to the shrine or teacher. This is done when first entering their presence or when taking leave. Done gracefully at the appropriate time, this is a beautiful gesture that honours the person who does it; at an inappropriate time, done compulsively, it appears foolish. Another common gesture of respect is to place the hands so that the palms are touching, the fingers pointing upwards, and the hands held immediately in front of the chest. The gesture of raising the hands to the slightly lowered forehead is called ‘aṇjalī’. This is a pleasant means of greeting, bidding farewell, saluting the end of a Dhamma talk, concluding an offering.”

(from: A Lay Buddhist’s Guide to the Monks’ Code of Conduct)

“To bow correctly, bring the forehead all the way to the floor; have elbows near the knees which should be about three inches apart. Bow slowly, being mindful of the body. As nearly as possible, the buttocks should be kept on the heels,...” (from: Advice for Guests at Bodhinyanarama Monastery)

121. In NE Thailand, the people will more often squat down to ‘welcome with respect’.

122. The cetiya (or stupa, chedi, sometimes pagoda) is one of the most ancient objects used as a focus of recollection and devotion towards the Lord Buddha. Buddha-rūpas (statues of the Buddha) came later through, probably, Bactrian Greek influence. Thus there are several traditions and practices:

“It is a tradition of bhikkhus that whoever enters the area around a cetiya, which is a place for the recollection of the Master, should behave in a respectful manner, neither opening his umbrella nor putting on sandals nor wearing the [robe] covering both shoulders. They should not speak loudly there or sit with their legs spread apart with their feet pointing (at the cetiya), thus not showing respect for that place. They must not stool or urinate, spit upon the terraces of the cetiya (or) before an image of the Exalted Buddha, their good behaviour thus showing respect for the Master.”

(EV,II,p.82)

Sanskrit renditions of the Pāṭimokkha Rule contain extra Sekhiya Training rules often concerned with ways of showing respect. For example, Rules 60 to 85 are all concerned with Buddha-Stupas:

Rule 63: “Not to wear leather shoes into a Buddha-Stupa is a rule I will observe; Rule 77: Not to carry a Buddha-image into a privy is a rule I will observe; Rule 84: Not to sit with my feet stuck out in front of a Buddha-Stupa is a rule I will observe.”

(Shaikshas from the Pratimoksha Precepts)

123. Also one of the Sanskrit Sekhiya Rules (Mūlasarvāstivādin Saika) disallows “sitting on a seat stretching out the feet in a public place”. (Buddhist Monastic Discipline p.99)

124. “In Asian society old age is highly respected. The Buddha adapted this tradition for the Sangha by recognizing seniority according to one’s age in the Sangha counted from the day (and time) of receiving the Upasampada. This is of course simply a practical conventional hierarchy and not an absolute hierarchical structure. In the functioning of the Sangha this would be offset by the principle of consensus democracy where every bhikkhu, regardless of seniority, has a voice, and by the power of wisdom (not to be confused with conviction) exhibited by the more highly realized members.”

( HS ch.22)

“The theme of a hierarchy of respect first came up for serious consideration in regard to obtaining lodgings. One time the Buddha set out from Savatthi with a large following of bhikkhus. The bhikkhus who were pupils of the group of six bhikkhus went ahead and appropriated all the [lodgings] and sleeping-places for their preceptors, teachers and for themselves. Venerable Sariputta, coming along behind, was unable to find a suitable lodging and sat down at the foot of a tree. The Buddha found him there and, finding the reason, asked the assembled bhikkhus:

‘Bhikkhus, who is worthy of the principle seat, the best water, the best alms-food?’”Some bhikkhus said that one gone forth from a noble family was most worthy of these things; some said one gone forth from a brahmana family...a merchant family...one versed in the suttas—a Vinaya expert ...a teacher of Dhamma...one having the first jhana …the second …the third …the fourth jhana;…a stream-enterer …a once-returner …a non-returner…an arahant …one with the Three-fold Knowledge…one with the six Psychic Powers. The Buddha then related the story of a partridge, a monkey and a bull-elephant who were friends and agreed to respect and heed the advice of the eldest. The Buddha concluded by saying:”’Well then, bhikkhus, if breathing animals can live mutually respectful, deferential and courteous, so do you, bhikkhus, shine forth so that you, gone forth in this well-taught Dhamma-Vinaya, live likewise mutually respectful, deferential and courteous.”’

(HS ch.22)

125. In Thailand, the common honorifics in (roughly) ascending order of age and seniority are: Tan, Phra, Luang Pee, Kruba, Ajahn, Tan Ajahn, Luang Por, Luang Poo. The Thai titles of ascending ecclesiastical rank are: Phra Khru, Chow Khun, Somdet, and Somdet Phra Sangha Raht (or the Supreme Patriarch). Also note that the English transliteration of these Thai titles also varies, for example, Acharn, Ajàn, Ajahn.

126. “The Uposatha (Sanskrit: Upavasatha) was the 14th or 15th day of the lunar fortnight (i.e., the full and new moon). It was recognized as an auspicious fast-day in Vedic times. These days, as well as the 8th, are reported to have been used by other religious groups during the Buddha’s time as suitable occasions to meet and discuss or preach their doctrines. These meetings became very popular and led to the various sects becoming more well-known and respected.”

( HS ch.20)

127. Equivalent to the fifteenth day of the waxing moon, the fifteenth or fourteenth day of the waning moon, and the eighth day of the waxing and waning moons. Until recently, villagers in Buddhist countries still used this calendar in everyday speech, e.g. they would not say, “Today is Monday” but “the third day of the waxing moon”.

128. While this form of training is well known in the traditionally Buddhist countries, it is only just starting to be appreciated in the West. For example, the Upasika Training at Amaravati Buddhist Monastery. This includes going for refuge to the Triple Gem, taking on the Five Precepts, practising meditation daily, visiting the monastery and fellow upasikas for mutual support. It should also involve right livelihood, which is to avoid professions that trade in arms, in living beings, meat, alcohol, and poison.

129. “Another frequent classification of training precepts is called the eight constituents of the Observance Day (atthanga-samannāgata uposatha) A.I,248; cf. A.I,211). The noble disciple reflects that for all their life the Arahants keep these eight standards of conduct so they will follow that example for the Observance Day. …”

( HS ch.5)
130. This is adapted from the work of Ven. Narada Mahāthera (expanded by Max Sandor and Ven. Metta-vihari), Ven. Gunaratana Mahāthera, Ven. Thanissaro and the Amaravati Chanting Book.

132. Extract from Bodhinyanarama’s Advice for Guests.

133. Extract from Observances Wat Pah Nanachat.

134. From the Lay Committee.

135. From some Australian women.
BIBLIOGRAPHY

The Book of the Discipline, tr. I.B. Horner, in 6 volumes, Pali Text Society, 1970-86, 73 Lime Walk, Headington, Oxford OX3 7AD, England. [This is the (almost) complete English translation of the original Pāli texts.]

The Buddhist Monastic Code, The Patimokkha Training Rules, translated and explained by Thanissaro Bhikkhu, Metta Forest Monastery, PO Box 1409, Valley Center, CA 92082, USA (Published for free distribution, also available on Buddhist WWW sites. See below.) [An excellent reference book, especially for bhikkhus. The present work relies on it extensively.]

[Mostly in Thai with some very useful English parts. The author is currently the foremost Buddhist scholar in Thailand.]

An Introduction to Buddhism, Teachings, history and practices, by Peter Harvey, Cambridge University Press, 1990, ISBN 0521 31333 3

Introduction to the Patimokkha Rules, translated and explained by Thanissaro Bhikkhu (Geoffrey DeGraff), Metta Forest Monastery, PO Box 1409, Valley Center, CA 92082, USA. (For free distribution from the WWW.) [See Appendix B]

A Lay Buddhist’s Guide to the Monks’ Code of Conduct, Serpentine Buddhist Monastery, Lot 1 Kingsbury Drive, Serpentine, WA 6205, Australia. (Also: Bodhinyanarama Monastery, 17 Rakau Grove, Stokes Valley, Wellington, New Zealand.) [Pamphlet]

Navakovāda. Instructions for Newly-ordained Bhikkhus and Sāmaneras, compiled by Ven. Somdet (Phra Mahā Samana Chao Krom Phraya) Vajiranyanavarorasa, Mahamakut Rajavidyalaya Press, Phra Sumeru Road, Bangkok 10200, Thailand, 1990. Translated from the Thai original. [A good though somewhat condensed guide to the Pāṭimokkha Rule, suitable for lay people.]

Observances, Wat Pah Nanachat, Ban Bung Wai, Ubon Ratchathani 34310, Thailand. [Pamphlet]

WWW resources: Access to Insight is an excellent starting point: http://world.std.com/~metta/
Demonstrating how all the Buddhist Traditions still preserve the Vinaya texts:

The Bhikshu Pratimoksha Precepts, from The Four-Part Vinaya of the Dharmagupta School, translated by The Buddhist Text Translation Society, Tathagata Monastery, City of Ten Thousand Buddhas, Talmage, California, 95481-0217, USA GLOSSARY

Abhiññā: Supernormal Powers; Higher Knowledges.

Ācariya: teacher. The senior monk who ‘gives’ the precepts to the candidate-bhikkhu. The senior monk on whom a young bhikkhu depends for instruction. (See Nissaya.)

Adhikaraṇasamatha: These are the last seven ‘rules’ (really ‘procedures’) of the Pātimokkha’s 227 rules, which list the ways to settle disputes in the Saṅgha.

Alajjī: shameless; referring to monks who do not care about keeping the Rule.

Anagarika: Homeless One; in some places a ‘postulant’ wearing white robes and keeping Eight Precepts. (See Appendix A) Aniyata: The section of rules that are undetermined or indefinite, and require Community inquiry.

Āpatti: offence; the act—either physical or verbal—of breaking any of the ordinances or rules set down by the Buddha.

Añjalī: showing respect by raising both hands, palms together, up towards the chest or face.

Bhante: general term of address for a bhikkhu, meaning “Venerable Sir”.

Bhikkhu: a male mendicant who has been formally accepted into the Bhikkhu Saṅgha and is training under the Pāṭimokkha Rule; Buddhist monk. In this work bhikkhu and monk are used interchangeably.

Bhikkhunī: a female mendicant equivalent to bhikkhu, but the ordination lineage has been lost in the Theravāda for many centuries.

Brahmacariya: the Holy Life of celibacy and strict chastity found in the Eight, Ten and Bhikkhu’s Precepts.

Cetiya or Chedi (Thai): bell-shaped stupa or reliquary with a tapering spire, also known as pagoda.

Dāna: giving, generosity, almsgiving.
Dasasila mata nuns: ordained Buddhist nuns living the Brahmacariya based on the Ten Precepts.

Defeat: see Pārājika

Devadatta, Ven. Devadatta: a bhikkhu in the time of the Buddha who tried to cause a schism in the Saṅgha.

Dhamma: the Teachings and Way of the Buddha; the Truth, the Law, etc.

Dhutaṅga (Pāli); Tudong (Thai): Often refers to the forest monk’s way of life, his wandering through forests and living at the foot of trees. It more literally refers to the ‘austere practices’ which are ‘means of shaking off or removing defilement’. Traditionally (Vism. 59–83) there are thirteen of these: wearing refuse-rag robes; possessing only the three robes; eating only alms food; on alms round going from house to house; eating only one meal a day; eating only from one’s alms bowl; refusing food that comes late; forest dweller’s practice; living at the roots of trees; open-air dweller’s practice; charnel-ground dweller’s practice; any-bed user’s practice; sitter’s practice (of not lying down).

Dukkaṭa: wrong-doing, the lightest offence.
Going Forth: See Ordination

Great Standards (Mahāpadesa): used as guidelines in deciding if novel or uncertain circumstances accord with the Dhamma and Vinaya.

Grahp (Thai): bowing to the floor from the kneeling position to show high respect.

Group-of-six monks: frequently appearing in the original setting down of a rule as the first perpetrators.

Invitation: See Pavāraṇā

Jātarūpa-rajata: gold and silver; money.

Kaṭhina: The annual robes-giving ceremony, offered sometime during the month following the Rains Retreat, normally during October–November.

Kappiya: making something allowable for a monk.

Kuṭi: a monk’s hut or shelter.

Meṇḍaka Allowance: for a steward to handle funds left by absent donors.

Navaka: ‘new monk’; a bhikkhu during his first five years.
Nibbāna: the extinction of the fires of greed, of hatred and of ignorance; the extinction of all defilements; Deliverance from all suffering.

Nikāya: (i) a sect or school; (ii) section of the Pāli Texts

Nissaggiya Pācittiya (Nis. Pāc.): an offence requiring forfeiture of some prohibited article together with ‘confession’ to another bhikkhu or bhikkhus.

Nissaya: taking ‘dependence’ on one’s Preceptor or Teacher. (See also Upajjhāya; Ācariya)

Ordination: ‘Going Forth’ from the home life to the life of a bhikkhu; Upasampadā is the assembled monk’s formal full acceptance of a candidate-bhikkhu into the Community. Pabbajjā is the first part of the ‘Ordination Procedure’ which gives the new novice or Sāmaṇera his robes and the Ten Precepts.

Pabbajjā: See Ordination.

Pācittiya (Pāc.): ‘Confession’; 92 Offences that can be cleared by formal ‘confession’ to another bhikkhu.

Pāli: the ancient Indian language of the Theravāda Canon, akin to Sanskrit.
Pāṭimokkha Rule: The fundamental 227 rules observed by a bhikkhu. It is recited by a single monk with the whole Community (of monks) present, every lunar fortnight.

Pārājika (Pār.): ‘Defeat’; The four heaviest, irremediable offences that automatically and irrevocably end the Bhikkhu-life.

Pātidesaniya: Four Offences ‘to be acknowledged’.

Pavāraṇā: Invitation; (i) by a donor to supply requisites to a particular bhikkhu; (ii) a ceremony for the Community of bhikkhus held at the end of the Rains Retreat.

Piṇḍapāta: food received in the alms-bowl (of a bhikkhu); alms-gathering; to go on an almsround.

Preceptor: See Upajjhāya

Precepts: The basic guidelines of bodily and verbal conduct. See Appendix A.

Rains Retreat, Vassa (Pāli): the annual three month period during the Monsoon Season, from the full moon of (usually) July to the full moon of (usually) October, when all bhikkhus are required to stay in one place. It also is the measure of years ordained for a Buddhist monk.
Requisites (Parikkhāra): of a bhikkhu are traditionally: three robes, an alms bowl, a belt, a razor, a needle, and a water-filter.

Saṅgha: Community. In this Vinaya book it usually refers to the ‘Bhikkhu Community’, either of a specific place or as a whole. There must be a local community of at least four bhikkhus before it is a Saṅgha. (It is also, of course, the third of the Three Gems and the Three Refuges where it applies to the ariya-saṅgha.)

Saṅghādisesa (Saṅgh.): a class of thirteen very serious offences; to be resolved it requires formal meetings of the Community and probation of the offending bhikkhu.

Sāmaṇera: novice; See Ordination.

Sekhiya: 75 Training Rules concerned with various aspects of etiquette in dressing, public behaviour, accepting and eating alms food, teaching Dhamma, etc.

Sīma: A specially designated area for formal meetings of the Community of monks.

Steward; Veyyāvaccakara: acts on behalf of donors to supply allowable items to a particular bhikkhu(s).
Sugata-span: an ancient measure (from the Pāli) based on the length of the Buddha’s cubit or forearm.

Thera: Elder, a bhikkhu for more than ten years.

Theravāda: ‘Doctrine of the Elders’, is the name of the oldest form of the Buddha’s teachings with texts in the Pāli language. The ‘Southern School’ of Sri Lanka and South-East Asia.

Tudong (Thai): See Dhutanāga.

Upajjhāya: Preceptor. The senior monk who ‘sponsors’ the candidate-bhikkhu’s ‘ordination’, and on whom the new bhikkhu will always depend for instruction. (See Ācariya; Nissaya.)

Upasampadā: See Ordination

Upāsaka (m.), Upāsikā (f.): Lay devotee who has taken refuge in the Triple Gem and keeps at least the Five Precepts and avoids wrong livelihood (trading in arms, in living beings, meat, alcohol and poison).

Uposatha: for bhikkhus this is the fortnightly Observance Day when the Pāṭimokkha Rule is recited. Weekly Observance Day for Upāsaka-Upāsikā.
Vandanā: paying respect or reverence.

Vassa: See Rains Retreat.

Veyyāvaccakara: See Steward.

Viḥāra: a dwelling place (for monks); monastery.

Vinaya: the bhikkhu’s Discipline which include the core 227 Pātimokkha rules together with many other ordinances for the right living and harmony of the Community of monks.
INDEX

A

abortion 70

ācariya (ajahn) 19,25,38,49,82,167,177,225,227,296,230,236,252,253,292,295,305,309

Adhikaraṇasamatha 59,187,305,

Admonition (Anusāsana) 252

agriculture 75

alcohol 143–144,281,284,297,312

anagarika 22,25,224,251,305

Aniyata 58,84–86,305

añjali 29,192,226,231,192,306

apartment 32,91,263

astrology 289

B

barter 152,160

bed 164,167,206,208,209

begging 98,102,112,114,163,178  See also alms food bhikkunī 26,53,306  See also dasasīla mata nuns; nuns bowing 28,192–193,225,240,242,245,292,308 bowl (alms-) 23,25,97,102,116–118,124,202,205,206,214,215,223,233,242, Brahmacariya 30,76,306,307

Buddha Statue 28,29,238  See also Etiquette buying 150,152,153,156,159,288

C

chanting 178,188,243,297

cheese 222,236,278–280

cheques 152–153,284

chocolate 236,270,278

cigarettes 281

—receiving cloth 32,79,124–125,220,245
See also robe
coffee 36, 222, 233, 236, 281
Confession 55, 57, 58, 71–74, 85, 87, 88, 90, 92–93, 100, 106, 114, 120, 123, 126, 129, 130, 138, 143, 144, 166, 170, 171, 175, 183–184, 192, 213, 309
Confession with Forfeiture 58, 105, 148–149, 153, 157, 159, 265–267, 288, 309 copyright 146, 282
corrupting families 180
counselling 83, 88, 262, credit card 150, 152–153
dasāsīla mata nuns 26, 43, 119, 147, 200, 254, 307
See also bhikkhunī, nuns debt 4

Devadatta (Ven.) 129,131,276,307

devotion 293
dhutāṅga (tudong) 24,27,162,271,272,274,307,312 digging 74 disputes 40,59,65,186–187,188,305 See also Adhikaraṇasamatha
disrobing 34,47,52,57,254,256
divorce 82–83,175,261 doctoring 31,39,290 See also medical treatement driving 38–39,94

Dubbhāsita 60

Dukkaṭa 59,73,80,133,307 edibles 107, 112, 121–123, 136, 141
—mixing edibles 122, 140
Eight Precepts See Precepts; also anagarika; brahmacariya entertainment 176
etiquette 59, 164, 192–193, 213, 225, 230, 311
euthanasia 259

filter 71, 97, 102, 103, 136, 222, 311
Five Precepts See Precepts
flirting 81, 88
food See alms food; edibles fortune telling 289 fraud 146,170
fruit 23,35,73,119,121,133–134,136–137,141,220,268,277–278  See also kappiya —fruit juice 35,121,136,138,222,232 —‘great’ fruits 35,137
furniture 164,221

G

generosity 28,83,132,170,228,284,285,306, ghee 100,114,138–139,222,232,279,
Going Forth 46,47,54,260,308,309  See also ordination gold 77–78,144,146,148–150,152,154,159,161,177,200,282,283,284,286, 287–288,308  See also money, jātarūpa-rajata good manners 59,116,129,239, grahp  See bowing

Great Standards  27,35,37,62–63,137,142,144,164,167,176,258,273–274, 278,281,289,308,

H

herbal medicines  See medicines honey  114,122,138,139,222,232,277,278,279

hotel  92

I

inheritance  37,104

intimacy  32,79,262

265–267,287,308,310

321
J

jātarūpa-rajata 150,308 See also gold; money

jack fruit 22,134,137,270

K

Kañhina 22,111,202–203,308 See also Robe Offering Time

kappiya 33,35,73,133,220,308 killing 70–71,103,132 See also murder, Precepts

L

law 12,144,253,114

lodging 24,54,89–93,97,107,162,163,164,206,233,252,288,289,295
M

magic  143,177
marriage  50,53,82–83,261
matchmaking  82
meat  114,119,131–132,148,273,275–276,277,297,312
—herbal medicines  39,122,141–142,222,233,252,274,280
—medical treatment  27,31,39,178,224,290–291  See also doctoring —tonic medicines  100,121,122,138–140,222,232,278–280
Meṇḍaka Allowance  34,154–155,308 money  30,33,106,107,144,145,147–151,152,154–155,156–158,159,161,200,224,282–288,308  See also gold; jātarūpa-rajata moon-days  55,199,296,310  See also Observance Day murder 57,69,70,71,252

N

name 37,130,189,194,227,230,252,284,312

Nikāya 188–191,273,309

Nissaggiya Pācittiya 58,149,202–204,206–207,265–267,274,287,309

nissaya 38,49,252

novice 25,43,46,50,74,92–93,104,119,129,147,200,210,228,230,256,262,275,309

nuns 10,18,25,26,28,29,32,33,84,119,147,199,200,224,228,254,275,307

See also bhikkhunī; dasasīla mata nuns

O

Observance Day 17,22,199,251,197,312 See also Moon days; Uposatha

Offering (n.) 26–27,28,31,35,40,58,82,95,99,105,107,109,111,116,117,120, <table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Term</th>
<th>Page Numbers</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>offering (v.)</td>
<td>79,107,120,122,123–125,133,136,143,151,158,220,221,223,226,231,233,237,240–245,275</td>
<td>See also cloth—receiving cloth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pabbajā</td>
<td>251</td>
<td>See also ordination; Going Forth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pāṭimokkha</td>
<td>43,45,48,52,53,54,55,77,187,199,201,249,253,254,255,259,294,303,306,310,312,313</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pārājika</td>
<td>See Defeat</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>paritta</td>
<td>178–179</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pātidesaniya</td>
<td>135,310</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pavāraṇā</td>
<td>See invitation</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>plant life</td>
<td>51,73,109,133,141,222</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
—destroying plant-life 69,73,133

politics 132,182

possessions 95,102,104,268,275

Precepts 17,22,26,43–44,196,199,221,227–228,253,294,297,304,305,306,310

—Five Precepts 17,43,52,56,76,143,145,197,199,297,312, —Eight Precepts 17,22,26,43,76,164,176,198,199,227–228,235,250,251,297

—Ten Precepts 17,26,43,46,76,119,147,176,200,252,254,307,309

See also anagarika; brahmacariya

preceptor 25,45,48–49,194,209,252,253,295,309,312

R

Rains Retreat 50,51,111,162,204,264,308,310

relatives 101,123,203,290 requisites 25,26,30,36,40,54,58,71,96–97,98,100,101,102,111,141,144,151,158,206,223,252,264,265,267,284,285,286,287,310,311
Right Livelihood 68,95,165,202,297,
—rag-robe 108,123,160,292,307 (See also dhutanga)
—Robe Offering Time 22,111,129,271,308 (See also katha
S
Sañghadisesa 57,59,79,163,180,201,202,207,311
samañera See novice seeds 35,73,133–134,220 (See also kappiya)

327
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Term</th>
<th>Pages and References</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>sexuality</td>
<td>57, 76, 77–78, 79–82, 85–86, 144, 175, 183–184, 197, 227, 228, 233, 252, 260, 261, 284,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>shaving</td>
<td>29–30, 47, 234, 250, 251, 260</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>shelter</td>
<td>27, 112, 162, 308</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See also lodging</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>sīma</td>
<td>48, 311</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>sleep</td>
<td>89–92, 164, 208, 221, 228, 295</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>smuggling</td>
<td>146</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>stealing</td>
<td>105, 109, 145–146, 282</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>steward</td>
<td>37, 151, 154–155, 156–158, 181, 223–224, 267, 284–287, 308, 311</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>storing</td>
<td>121, 126–127, 136, 138, 154, 202, 222, 275</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>sugar</td>
<td>114, 136, 138–140, 222, 223, 278, 279, 280</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>suicide</td>
<td>70</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Term</td>
<td>Page Numbers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>--------------------</td>
<td>--------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>tax evasion</td>
<td>146</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>tea</td>
<td>36, 222, 233, 236, 281</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Teacher</td>
<td>See Ācāriya</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>teaching</td>
<td>12, 16, 45, 70, 80, 88, 166–167, 172, 225, 231, 311</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>telephone</td>
<td>262–263, 282, 284</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thera</td>
<td>49, 194, 312</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Theravāda</td>
<td>10, 17, 18, 22, 26, 53, 65, 188, 250, 251, 258, 300, 303, 306, 309, 312</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>thread</td>
<td>102, 178, 266</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thullaccaya</td>
<td>59, 146</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>tonics</td>
<td>See Medicines</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>touching</td>
<td>31, 32, 33, 79–80, 161, 233, 261, 275</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
travelling 33,38–39,51,89,93,214,224,225,264,282,286,290
—travellers cheques 152–153

Triple Gem 28–29,90,240,247,297,312

tudong See dhutaṅga

U

uposatha 199,249,251,254,296,297,312,325

upajjhāya See Preceptor

V

vandana 193,313 See also etiquette

vassa See Rains Retreat

vegetarian 132 See also Meat

veyyāvaccakara See steward wealth  77,107,147,283,291  See also Money, Gold

women  26,31,53,79,81,86–87,88–92,94,175,177,225

wrong livelihood  178–179,312